ROYAL ASIATIC SOCIETY.

At a meeting held on Monday, Nov. 19—the Right Hon. Sir BARTLE FRERE, Bart., G.C.B., &c., in the chair—the following new members were elected :—

RESIDENTS.—Sir Louis Jackson, C.I.E.; T. Cotter Morison, Esq.; Wilberforce H. Wyke, Esq.; Frederick Conway, Esq.; Muhammed Abd-al-Jelal; Harbhamji of Morbi (Trin. Coll., Camb.); Rev. S. Baromian; Miss Edith Simcox; Lestock Reid, Esq.; Rev. T. L. Bigger; Capt. C. J. Hatfield.

NON-RESIDENTS.—David Ross, Esq., C.I.E.; Alexander Cumine, Esq.; H. H. Waghiji Rawaji; H. A. Hughes, Esq.; Pandit Shyamaji (Ball. Coll.); Capt. John Humphrey; Selig Ram Bias, Esq. (Emm. Coll.); Philip E. Brits, Esq., of Colombo; C. A. Grierson, Esq.; Nawab Abd-al-Hak, Hyderabad; R. G. Alford, Esq.; Mehta Takht Singh (Oudeypur); Henry Falls, Esq., Tokio; L. Myriantheus, Esq.; T. Watters, Esq.; Dr. Bhawari Singh (Oudeypur); Oscar Frankfurter, Esq.

Mr. HABIT A. SALMONE read a paper entitled, "On the importance to Great Britain of the study of Arabic." After calling attention to the fact that the study of Arabic was greatly neglected in England as compared with what was done abroad (the Roman Propagand maintaining a constant succession of pupils in various Eastern languages, Russia has its college for the same purpose, at Kezan, Austria its college at Vienna, and France its "Ecole pour les Langues Orientales Vivantes.") He showed that the Queen of England sways over a far greater number of Muslims (whose Rule of Faith and Code of Law is the Korān) than any other Potentate. He then remarked that, when in the East, he had always noticed how much it pleased the natives to be addressed by an European in their own language, the inference being that a British official so qualified would more readily obtain important information, and would more favourably impress the people than one unacquainted with their vernacular. A knowledge of Arabic, he thought, would have more weight with Orientals than that of French or Italian with Frenchmen or Italians. Again, after a military success had been obtained by military skill, a knowledge by the conquerors of the language of the conquered would tend to lubricate, so to speak, much of the friction which hostilities would naturally have engendered. Surely, the readiest method of conciliating national prejudices is to secure the free communication of a common language between the ruler and the ruled. It seems, therefore, astonishing that England, with her vast and complex interests in the East, should be the last instead of the first to supply instructions in Arabic in her civil, military, and naval institutions. It ought never to be forgotten that Western learning owes much to the zeal of the mediæval Arabs, who collected and translated the works of eminent Greek authors from Aristotle to Apollonius, and further, as Dr. Badger has observed, that many modern Oriental languages, such as Persian, Turkish, and Hindustani are permeated by Arabic. In conclusion, Mr. Salmone remarked that a fact may be generally known without meeting with the consideration it deserves; and, that though the facts adduced regarding the importance of the study of Arabic are extensively known in this country, it is still desirable that such a recognition of admitted facts be obtained as may best lead to practical results. If, said Mr. Salmone, French is accepted as the general language of Europe, Arabic is entitled to be called "The French of the East."

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette, Nov. 9.)

Sir Donald Stewart and Staff arrived at Umballa on Monday, after having inspected Subathu, Dugshai, Kasauli, and Sanawar. His Excellency was to leave Umballa on Wednesday evening for Futehpore.

Brigadier General Edwardes, who came out by the last mail and assumed command of the Bombay District on the 31st October, is expected to be shortly confirmed in that appointment, whereupon Sir O. V. Tanner will obtain the pucka command of the Quetta District. General Mallaby, we believe, will probably go to Ahmednuggur.

Major General Sir James Hills, K.C.B., V.C., Royal Artillery, has been permitted to take and use the surname of Johnes, in addition to and after that of Hills.

General Prendergast, commanding in Burmah, proceeds to Bangalore in the cold season to command a division at the camp of exercise there. Colonel Gatacre accompanies him as Quartermaster General, Colonel Elliot remaining behind in command of the garrison.

Sir F. Roberts inspected the Trichinopoly Brigade on Wednesday morning in review order. It was a good opportunity, the Madras Mail says, for contrasting the new dress of the Madras Native Infantry with the old, the 21st N. I. being dressed in the new zouave kit, while the 30th stuck to the old style of uniform.

Brigadier General T. G. Kennedy, C.B., Commanding the Punjab Frontier Force, goes on privilege leave for a month, after the close of the expedition to the Tukht-i-Suleiman; the current duties of the command being carried on by Colonel W. C. Chowne, 2nd Punjab Infantry. The expedition will cross the frontier about the 19th instant, and will probably return on the 2nd December.

Brigadier General Godfrey Clerk, Adjutant General of the Madras Army, returns from his short leave to England by the next mail steamer. General Clerk will at once join Sir F. Roberts on his tour of inspection.

General Gordon, C.B., has returned from leave of absence, and has resumed command of the Mooltan Brigade.

At Umballa, on the 31st October, H. E. Sir Donald Stewart, Commander in Chief in India, presented the medals for the Afghan expedition to the 32nd Pioneers. The regiment, or rather the head-quarters—for a strong detachment is at Simla—were formed up on the Royal Horse Artillery parade ground. His Excellency, after inspecting the regiment, himself pinned the medals on the breasts of the native officers. The regiment then marched past; and His Excellency made a speech, in which he commented favourably on the work the Pioneers had done in the Afghan campaign, especially in the Gwaja Pass, and bore testimony to their cheerful endurance of exposure and hardships. The regiment, which was under the command of Lieutenant Colonel Channer, V. C., wore the new red blouse and Pioneer equipment.

Major General Sir Herbert Macpherson arrived in Allahabad from the hills on Friday evening, and re-assumed command of the division on the following day.

The Poona camp of exercise will be held in January, and after it is over General Hardinge will visit the big camp at Bangalore.

Major W. E. Roberts, Captain E. A. Mostyn, and Lieutenant G. S. Nicholson, 7th Royal Fusiliers, have taken over the paymaster's duties, vice Major G. F. Moore, deceased.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

"A quaint and undoubtedly clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat, which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease. His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their 'British rulers.'"—Daily Telegraph.

5. A description of the fighting around Kabul, Dec., 1879, including the loss of the Horse Artillery and mountain guns, and the fighting on the surrounding heights, and of the investment of Sherpur.
6. The present Amir, Abdul Rahman.
7. General Roberts' march from Kabul to Kandahar.
8. The battle of Kandahar, and the return march to India.

The Preface contains a large portion of a valuable letter written to the author by General Sir Frederick Roberts, G.C.B., V.C.

The book contains a map, a portrait of General Roberts, a picture of Mount Sika Ram, and six other illustrations drawn chiefly from photographs, which enhance their accuracy.

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL &amp; CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and elite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EXPRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally by practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 250 millions of our fellow-subjects.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

C COUGHS,
C COLDS,
A STHEMA,
B BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Dr. J. C. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE.—Vice-Chancellor, Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR OF CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 15th, 1884.

DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHOEA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880.

To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.
DEAR SIR,—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhoea and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.C.

IS THE GREAT SPECIFIC FOR CHOLERA.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharmac. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE IS THE TRUE PALLIATIVE IN NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN OF EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of COLIC, PILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALETTATION, HYSTERIA.

IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSUBTLE IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1/2d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURERS, J. T. DAVENPORT, 33, Russell St., W.C.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Nov. 16; Madras and Allahabad, Nov. 14; Calcutta, Nov. 13.

THE chief interest of the week's news from Calcutta has been a very sad one indeed; centred in the alarming evidence afforded by the incidents of Lord Ripon's reception in the metropolis, of the disastrous results of the Viceroy's obstinate vanity and tyrannical high-handedness.

WE would commend to those of our Anglo-Indian friends who still retain any hankering after Radicalism—if any such there be—a careful perusal of the article on Lord Ripon's reception in Calcutta, that appeared in last Tuesday's Daily News. Our Radical contemporary says:—

"The unmannerly outbreak which accompanied the return of Lord Ripon to Calcutta, on Saturday, will create a lively sympathy with the Viceroy among his countrymen at home. The Europeans who are opposed to his policy with respect to native rights and privileges seem to have borrowed their behaviour from the French mob which hooted the King of Spain. Their unhappy conduct discredits them, and the cause in the interest of which they have adopted it. It is only another sign of the temper fostered by unscrupulous partisanship at home. The welcome from the natives is the more significant, as showing not only their appreciation of Lord Ripon's government, but as exhibiting the divergence of feeling and sympathy between them and the official class. The presence of a member of the Royal House has happily exerted a unifying effect, and the Duke of Connaught's residence in India is, so far, fortunate. It must, however, suggest serious thoughts as to the conditions of British rule in India that a small step in the direction of that equality of the natives with Europeans promised in the Queen's proclamation should have roused such bitter antagonism at home, and such resentment among the Europeans in India. The event, however, makes it only more imperative on the Government and the Liberal party at home to stand by Lord Ripon in a policy which represents the goodwill of the people of England towards the people of India. Lord Ripon has fully deserved not only the confidence of the vast and intelligent population which he has received, but that of all Englishmen who desire that India should be governed for the benefit of Indians, and not for the exclusive advantage of their rulers."

It would probably be difficult to compress a larger number of shameful instances of the suggestio falsi into the same space, than we find here dished up for the delectation of Radical spite. We should have been prepared regretfully to agree with the Daily News if it had condemned the conduct of the English working-men of Calcutta in hooting the Viceroy, on the ground that they had followed the "unmannerly" example of the Londoners, who hooted King Charles when he went down to Parliament to seize the Five Members—or the example of the mob that hooted King James after the trial of the Seven Bishops—or the example of the American Colonists who flung the tea into Boston Harbour. On each of these historical occasions, not to mention many others of less fame, a mob of Englishmen has behaved, under provocation, in a way which we cannot approve. And to that extent we should have agreed with the Daily News in condemning and deploring the ebullition of feeling. All the influence of the leaders of English Society in Calcutta has been put forth—so the Times correspondent asserts, and we should have felt sure of the fact in any case—to suppress these manifestations of dislike to the Viceroy. But it is the sheerest hypocrisy to affect a holy surprise at the fact that less cultured and less philosophical Englishmen have been unable thus to control their feelings. And it is something worse, to compare this ebullition of honest resentment to the unprovoked "unmannerliness" of the Parisian mob.

If Lord Ripon had been a Tory Viceroy, would it have been still so difficult for the Daily News to remember that the Englishmen of India are after all Englishmen, and chafe angrily when they find that they have exchanged a land of liberty for a land of despotism? Cælum non animum mutant, qui trans mare currunt. The most caucus-ridden reader of the Daily News would rebel against the caucus, if that amiable body proposed to take away habeas corpus. And yet the Daily News thinks the unmannerly Englishmen of Calcutta have no more provocation to allege in excuse of their unmannerliness than the Parisian mob had when they hissed King Alfonso.

OBSERVE, too, the Daily News on "Native rights and privileges!" And the imputation that the Englishmen of Calcutta behaved as they did "in the interest" of their cause! And also, the "divergence of feeling and sympathy between them [the natives] and the official class." Observe, indeed, the whole article. And does anyone, acquainted with the ability and general intelligence of the Daily News, believe that all these suggestions of that which is not, are due only to ignorance?

THE Radical paper of Leeds, however, the Leeds Mercury, the organ of Mr. Herbert (Gladstone)—out-herods Herod in vilifying our fellow-countrymen in India, and in attributing to them false and base motives. It says of them, in the issue of Tuesday, Dec. 4:—

"They are a mere handful of men who live in India simply for their own personal profit, and whose fate is absolutely dependent upon the maintenance of the British Government." And again:—

"That assumption is that the first duty of the Viceroy is to look after the interests of the handful of Europeans in India, and to make the rights of the whole native population entirely subservient to those interests."

And once more:—

"We are greatly mistaken, however, if any considerable section of the English people are really prepared to maintain that we hold India for the benefit of a handful of traders of English birth."

OBSERVE, here, how the Radical organ returns again and again to the damning fact that the Englishmen in India are only "a handful!" It is thrice repeated in the sentences we have quoted. These are the valiant champions of the weak against the strong, who, by implication, deny to the Englishmen of India the rights they inherited from their forefathers, because they are "a handful."

THE St. Andrew's dinner has marked the feeling of the cultured classes of Calcutta as strongly as the hooting at the gate at Government House marked that of the working classes. We are proud to find that the 200 leading Scotchmen of Calcutta, by the "ringing cheers" with which they greeted Mr. Keswick's eloquent speech, endorsed to the full that opinion of Lord Ripon's wretched mismanagement, which has been consistently maintained in these columns during the last two years. But, of course, the Daily News and the Leeds Mercury are prepared to pour as much contempt on the Scotch community in India, as on other Anglo-Indians.

LORD HARTINGTON at Accrington on Saturday was at last forced to admit that we have been altogether misled as to the opinion of the Indian Council here at home on the Ilbert Bill. Instead of that unanimous approval, "without revision and without protest," of which we heard so much back in August, and which then staggered so many of us, it now turns out that the Council not only solemnly warned Lord Hartington of the danger of the Bill, but even pressed him to refer it back to the consideration of the Government of India! This revelation is hardly more pleasant than the Reuter's telegrams, or the secret interview between Lord Kimberley and Mr. Atkins. There seems to be some witchcraft about this miserable Bill, that demoralises everyone who takes it up.

THEN again, we all remember the thrill of surprise that ran through the Anglo-Indian community last March at the news that Sir Stuart Bayley had spoken in support of the Bill. But now it has at last leaked out that Sir Stuart Bayley and Mr. Hope had urged immediate withdrawal!—and even Major Baring, Sir Donald Stewart, and General Wilson had urged ultimate withdrawal!

Thus, then, after nine months of deception and trickery, the naked truth is at length dragged out, that the whole responsibility for this wicked Bill rests with Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert.

THE Englishmen of Simla, Delhi, Mirzapore, Muzaffarpur, Bhagalpur, Dibrugarh, Lakhimpur, Moulmain, and other places, have again spoken out; and they are met by the abuse we have culled above from the Leeds Mercury and the Daily News.

LORD KIMBERLEY appears to have been "cornered" by Mr. Atkins's challenge to declare plainly what really did take place at the secret interview at the India Office; for no reply has as yet been vouchsafed. After the two letters, one from Mr. Maitland and the other from Mr. Bickersteth, in which Lord Kimberley hastened to tell the public what he did not say, it will hardly be pretended that this novel reticence, just at the critical moment, is due to a sudden access of dignity. The public has now most clearly a right to know what Lord Kimberley really believes that he told Mr. Atkins about the origination of the Bill by the Government of India. For aught the public knows, the contradiction given to Mr. Atkins's statement in Lord Kimberley's last letter might refer simply to a misplaced word or a changed tense.

THE publication of Sir Bartle Frere's letter in the Times on Monday ought to settle the fate of the Bill. But so ought any one of scores of similar incidents that have preceded it; and Lord Ripon's criminal vanity still stands in the way.

WE regret to observe that the Directors of the G.I.P. Railway have been compelled to announce, with reference to the projected formation of a company to construct a railway from Bhopal to Gwalior and Cawnpore, under an arrangement with the Government, that the matter remains in abeyance. The Secretary of State has informed the promoters that Her Majesty's Government, having decided to move that "the subject of provision for the extension of Railways in India shall be referred to a select committee of the House of Commons next session," he does not deem it expedient, pending the result of that inquiry, to enter into an arrangement with them on the basis proposed in their letters. The paralysis of all works of improvement of this nature, under the present régime in India, is rapidly becoming a matter of the most serious import, that ought to cause grave anxiety to all those who have the interests of India at heart.

THIS paralysis of productive public works, which seems to be one of the most striking features of Lord Ripon's disastrous policy, was the subject of Mr. Kimberley's powerful paper read before the East India Association last week. In India, as in Ireland and elsewhere, the Radical policy is, to neglect the proper and healthful development of natural resources, and then to endeavour to make up for the neglect by schemes of confiscation like the Bengal Tenancy Bill—or to blind men's eyes to the ruin that is being wrought, by brilliant coruscations of sentimental legislation like the Ilbert Bill. Unhappily, Ilbert Bills butter no parsnips; whilst the plunder of the landlords will rapidly be consumed unproductively, and the country will be poorer than ever.

For several years efforts have been made to procure a church for the district of Parell, in which are situated the principal works of the Great Indian Peninsula, and Bombay, Baroda and Central India Railway Companies. The European population belonging to these companies within the district amounts to between 200 and 300. The nearest church is at Byculla, two miles and upwards from their residences, and this church and the service of its chaplain are fully occupied by the resident Europeans and large schools of that district. A congregation has been formed, and meets on Sunday mornings in the Recreation Room of the G.I.P.R., and on Sunday evenings in the Institute of the B.B. and C.I.R., where Divine service is conducted by the Rev. Dr. Evans, head master of the Cathedral High School, who is also very attentive to the spiritual wants of the congregation. Many of the companies' servants are zealous in serving in the choir, and there is a hearty feeling among them towards the Church; but the Holy Communion cannot be celebrated, nor has the congregation the advantage of worshipping in a building set apart for religious purposes. Subscriptions have been realised according to the following list. The Government have given the largest sum allowed by the regulations, according to the accommodation to be provided, besides a free site; H.E. the Governor, a subscription of Rs.2,000, besides a fine organ, in memory of his deceased wife; a service of silver plate of the value of £50, for the purposes of the Holy Communion, has been presented by W. Hartridge, Esq., of Upper Deal, England; the agents of the railway companies have agreed to deposit soil at the railway station close to the site, in order to fill up the ground to the necessary level; and the Government of India have authorised Rs.180 per month towards the stipend of the incumbent; but the entire sum secured at present falls short by £600 of what is necessary to complete the building. There will also have to be provided the pulpit, font, seats, and the usual furniture. Subscriptions are earnestly desired for this deserving object, and may be paid to "The Parell Church Building Fund" at the Union Bank of London, or the Hongkong and Shanghai Banking Corporation in Bombay. The following are the members of the Building Committee:—His Excellency the Right Hon. Sir James Fergusson, Bart., Governor of Bombay, president; S. Jackson, Esq., locomotive superintendent, G.I.P.R., vice president; G. A. Barnett, Esq., agent, G.I.P.R.; T. W. Wood, Esq., agent, B.B. and C.I.R.; J. R. Duxbury, Esq., traffic manager, B.B. and C.I.R.; F. W. Stevens, Esq., executive engineer on special duty, G.I.P.R.; H. H. Reading, Esq., foreman machine shop, G.I.P.R.; C. Parker, Esq., foreman moulder, B.B. and C.I.R.; Mr. Thomas, Esq., locomotive foreman, B.B. and C.I.R.; Rev. Dr. Evans, head master, Cathedral High School, secretary.

THE "depressing circumstances" of the opening of the Calcutta Exhibition—notwithstanding the joyful fact of the presence of H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, which at any other time would alone have been sufficient to make the day a golden one in the annals of India—afford a sad illustration of the depressing effect that will be produced on every good work in India by Lord Ripon's continued residence in that unhappy country.

WE are glad to observe the warmth with which His Royal Highness was received in Calcutta—and especially that the volunteers welcomed the son of their beloved Sovereign with the largest muster ever known.

THE Englishman gives the following account of the Calcutta freight market for the week ending Nov. 13:—

"Our freight market has been going gradually from bad to worse, and ships seem to be more than ever inclined to take what is offering rather than wait for any improvement, the chances of which seem very remote. Steamer rates, however, have not quite shared this drop, as available canal tonnage has been rather scarce, and although there is almost no cargo offering, rates may be said to be a little firmer. During the week three vessels fixed on the London berth, and four accepted American employment, but owing to large arrivals our unfixed tonnage is increased to 37,000 tons. Our unfixed tonnage stands at 37,377 tons."

We take from Messrs. Carritt and Co.'s "Fortnightly Market Report" the following account of the Calcutta Tea Market for the same period:—

"During the fortnight 35,023 packages have been offered, of which 33,753 changed hands at auction held on the 1st and 8th instant. The quality has been irregular, but many invoices are showing desirable quality, especially from Sylhet. The demand has improved, and all descriptions have met with good enquiry at an advance in prices. Sou-chongs and Broken Teas are rather firmer, Pekoes show a rise of  $\frac{1}{4}$ d. to 1d., and Broken Pekoes of 1d. to 2d. per lb., on our last quotations.

MESSRS. THOMAS AND Co. give the following on the Calcutta Indigo Market for the same period :—

"Four Public Sales, consisting almost entirely of Plant Oudes, have been held during the week, at which 2,064 chests were disposed of, making the total quantity out of the market about 13,500 maunds. Good and fine Oudes suitable for the continent appear very scarce, such kinds have sold rather better, while we make no change in the middling and ordinary qualities. About 8,500 chests have already arrived from the North-West, against 7,500 chests on the same date last year. We have heard of no sales of European marks by private sale, and with the exception of a few small lots we do not look for any arrivals for at least another week.

Dr. Roepstorff, Survey Settlement Officer, Andaman Islands, shot by a havildar, Madras Infantry; Mr. C. Lake, late Superintendent H.M.'s Gaol, Bombay, died in London. Mr. John Christian, Indigo Planter, Bhagulpoore District; Surgeon Major H. W. Spry, 25th Punjab Native Infantry, Ferozepore.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Agricultural Department on the state of the weather and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending Nov. 6 :—

"There has been heavy rain during the past week in the coast districts of the Madras Presidency which has inundated the crops in parts, but general prospects continue good in Madras and Mysore. Rain has also fallen throughout the Deccan and Southern Mahratta country, doing slight injury to standing crops in several districts. Great scarcity of water prevails in Kurrachee, and locusts are destructive in three districts of the Deccan. Rain is needed in Ulwar, otherwise the reports from Central India and Rajputana are favourable. No rain fell in Assam, and very little in Burma, and more is wanted in both for the rice crop, but general prospects are good. Slight and partial showers have occurred in the Central and Southern parts of Bengal, which have done some good, but, except in the Eastern districts and Cooch Behar and Jalpaiguri, the greater part of the rice crops on high lands has been already destroyed, and the crops on low lands are in a critical condition. Rabi sowings are also seriously impeded. In the Central Provinces the outlook continues favourable, although some injury has been caused to cotton and linseed by cloudy weather. In the North-Western Provinces and Oudh and Punjab, prospects are fair, but rain is much needed for the rabi in both provinces. Harvesting of the kharif is still in progress in most provinces, and the outturn has generally proved to be under the average. Rabi sowings are also progressing and promise fairly well, except in Bengal. Cholera in a sporadic form exists in Madras and parts of Northern India, and fever is prevalent, otherwise the public health is fair. Prices continue to rise in Bengal."

The Report for Bengal states :—

"Slight rainfall has been reported from parts of Burdwan, Orissa, and Chota Nagpore divisions, and also from the districts of Gya and the Southall Parganas. It has been of some benefit to the rice on the low and irrigated lands and to the cultivation of the rabi crops in those parts. The general outlook of the province, however, is serious, save in the eastern districts, and in the northern districts of Julpaigorie and Cooch Behar, from which the reports are rather favourable. The rice on the high lands has been mostly destroyed, and has also suffered to a more or less extent on the low lands. The prospects of the rabi crops also are not good, and unless rain falls soon, they too will be very deficient. Prices have risen throughout the province. From some districts the rise has been reported to be very considerable. Fever, as usual at this season, is prevalent in some districts; elsewhere the public health is pretty good."

MAIL NEWS.

An Aka raid took place on the evening of the 10th Nov. The Forest Ranger and his clerk were carried off to the hills by Akas from Baliparahat, eighteen miles north of Tezpor. Several houses were looted, and the villagers and garden coolies are in great alarm. There are no police at the outposts. Only twenty police are now available. Nothing can be done till reinforcements arrive. The deputy commissioner and superintendent of police are on the spot making inquiries.

A serious affray occurred between some members of the Calcutta police force and a number of Mahomedans during the Mohurrum celebration in Calcutta. A number of persons were injured on both sides, and the disturbance was only quelled with great difficulty.

The relations between the Mahomedan and Hindoo sections of the population at Agra are still very strained. The Hindoos closed their shops for several days, and great inconvenience resulted to the community in consequence, as most of the trade is in their hands.

Intelligence received in Calcutta from the Andamans states that Mr. De Roepstorff, Settlement Officer, has been killed in the Nicobars by a native soldier, who had some grudge against him. The murderer subsequently committed suicide.

The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal reached Calcutta on Saturday, Nov. 10, and at once directed his personal attention to all the preliminaries in connection with the opening of the International Exhibition.

The Lieutenant Governor of the North West Provinces opened the Soldiers' Industrial Exhibition at Lucknow on the Nov. 6.

H. E. the Commander in Chief of Bombay arrived in Bombay on Wednesday Nov. 14, from his tour up-country.

H. E. Sir Frederick Roberts is still on tour in Madras. His Excellency visited Tuticorin on Nov. 7, and subsequently proceeded to Valiathory.

The preparations in Bombay for the reception of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, who were expected on Wednesday, Nov. 21, were being carried out on a scale of great grandeur. The city was to be illuminated on the evening of their Royal Highnesses' arrival.

The Bombay Municipal Corporation have sanctioned a grant of Rs. 5,000 towards the fund which is being raised to provide for the reception of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Apart from this municipal contribution, the fund amounted to nearly Rs. 12,000.

A meeting of the Calcutta Municipal Commissioners was held on Friday, Nov. 19, for the purpose of taking steps to accord a suitable reception to the Royal visitors on their arrival in the city. A large and representative committee was appointed to carry out the objects in view.

The Viceroy reached Srinagar on Nov. 9, and was received on arrival by the principal nobles.

The Maharajah of Cooch-Bihar was installed with great éclat on Nov. 8 by the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal.

The prospect of a partial failure of the autumn crops in the Lower Provinces has been turned to account by the Behar Landholders' Association, to prepare a fresh memorial to the Viceroy on the Bengal Rent Bill. They point out that the earliest consequence of scarcity will be a cessation of rent-payment from the ryots, whether in cash or kind; while they themselves will have to discharge their obligations to Government as punctually as ever. To do this they will in many cases have to mortgage, or otherwise encumber, their estates; but the land has fallen immensely in value, the zemindars say, since the bill first cast its shadow before it. Negotiations for the sale or mortgage of estates are now constantly falling through, and landowners in case of difficulty will only be able to get money on exorbitant and disastrous terms. The Association holds, moreover, that the published opinions of the Bengal officers on the Bill discover a majority against "the radical changes" which that measure proposes, and calls upon the Government for further inquiry, before delivering the Bill to the Select Committee.—Pioneer.

A cold-blooded murder was committed at Delhi, on Nov. 8, by a soldier of the wing of the Dorsetshire Regiment stationed there. The man had had some slight quarrel with a comrade, and whilst he was sleeping, he shot him dead with his rifle.

The official opinions upon the Bengal Tenancy Bill were to be published on Nov. 20, and on the following day the Select Committee was to hold their first meeting, and address themselves to the arduous task which lies before them.

Meetings have been held at Calcutta, Bangalore, and other places, to celebrate the anniversary of the birth of Luther.

A daring gang robbery was committed at Moulemein on Nov. 8. The occupant of a house was shot in the shoulder, and his wife was also severely injured.

A resolution has been published by the Government of India dealing with the petroleum traffic.

The recommendations of the Education Commission have been published. They are of a very numerous character, and range over the whole field of education.

The Hon. Mr. Gibbs, officiating President of the Council, arrived in Calcutta on Nov. 14.

General Wilkinson, commanding the Presidency Brigade, will accompany the Commander in Chief to the Bangalore Camp of Exercise.

The following is a list of works of public utility constructed by private individuals in Bengal during 1882 :—8 public buildings, Rs. 24,158; 7 roads, Rs. 4,554; 2 bridges, Rs. 1,180; 5 embankments, Rs. 1,833; 127 tanks, Rs. 87,808; 29 wells, Rs. 10,171; 2 masonry ghats, Rs. 4,500; petty works costing less than Rs. 200 each, Rs. 34,141. The total thus contributed, and in which every district had a share, was Rs. 1,68,345, as compared with Rs. 3,18,075 in 1881, and Rs. 2,72,645 in 1880.

Surgeons B. M. Skinner and E. O. Wright, on their arrival from England, are posted to the Allahabad station hospital.

On arrival from special duty in Egypt, Surgeon F.D.C. Hawkins has been directed to proceed to Shillong, and Surgeon A. H. Pierson, to Peshawur.

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is a telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Nov. 30:—

"The telegrams from the Secretary of State for India were officially published yesterday evening. The first, addressed to the Viceroy, says:—

"Mr. Atkins reasserts that I said we had nothing to do with the Ilbert Bill. I have replied with an emphatic denial. I told him you had proposed modifications, which we had approved, and that the Bill now rested with your Council. I referred him to Lord Northbrook's speech as expressing the views of the Government."

"The second telegram, addressed to the Government of Calcutta, repeats the above message, and adds:—

"You may give an unqualified denial to the statement that I have said the English Government had nothing to do with the Ilbert Bill. We have given an unwavering and strong support to the Indian Government, and such a statement on my part as is attributed to me would have been not only untrue, but absurd."

"To-day's journals comment severely on Lord Kimberley's denial, and public opinion shows a decided disposition to accept Mr. Atkins's version of the conversation. The Statesman, a Radical newspaper, believes Mr. Atkins's account, and thinks that diplomatic etiquette compels Lord Kimberley to deny that he used the words, which probably were not intended to be published."

"Lord Ripon arrived in Calcutta yesterday morning. If there were any doubt regarding the dislike of the Ilbert Bill and the personal unpopularity which that measure has brought upon the Viceroy, that doubt must have been dissipated by the marked coldness of the reception accorded by the European community. The question whether the volunteers would turn out to form a guard of honour has been much discussed for some weeks past, and curiosity drew a considerable number of spectators to the mustering point at an early hour in the morning. The result accorded with general expectation. The non-official element in the regiment was almost entirely absent; the mounted company was represented by eleven men, of whom three were officers, out of a strength of about ninety, the naval artillery mustered four men, the merchants' company showed one representative, and the traders' company two officers and one man. The entire muster, about 340 strong, consisted of two companies of Government clerks, one company of railway employees, and three companies of cadets from various schools. On the steps of Government House, where the leading members of the community usually assemble to receive the Viceroy, the non-official element was conspicuous by its absence, there being only three or four independent Europeans to be seen there. A small number of Europeans had collected outside the gate, and showed some signs of disapproval as the cortège drove past. For some days previous handbills exhorting the natives to turn out and welcome Lord Ripon had been industriously circulated, with the result of causing a large crowd of natives to gather at the station and along the route, and banners with inscriptions were conspicuously displayed at various points. Although the crowd could hardly be called a representative one, still the fact that it assembled at all unpleasantly accentuates the breach between the Europeans and a certain section of the natives, of which the most unhappy Bill has been the cause."

"The annual St. Andrew's dinner has long been one of the principal events of the Calcutta season, but hitherto it has had social, rather than political, importance. A change in this respect might have been expected to follow the present state of public feeling, and, accordingly, the gathering of Friday evening was looked to with some interest. Over 200 Scotchmen, including many prominent citizens of Calcutta, assembled to do honour to the memory of their patron saint. Mr. Keswick presided, and among the guests were the Bishop of Calcutta and General Wilkinson, commanding the Presidency district. The usual loyal toasts were received with the greatest enthusiasm, especially when the chairman referred to the approaching visit of the Duke of Connaught. The third toast, the health of the Viceroy, was proposed without a speech, and was received with unmistakable coldness. Mr. Keswick then rose to propose 'The land we live in,' and spoke as follows, almost every sentence being greeted with ringing cheers:—

"On a like occasion two years ago I spoke of the cordial relations with our native brethren, and how the bonds of friendship were being daily strengthened. We had then a comparatively new Viceroy, and expected that under his government peace and goodwill would flourish and increase. We saw him giving attention to measures for education, the introduction of local self-government, the encouragement of private enterprise, and the development of the resources of the country, and we were all ready to strengthen his hands and aid him. But we have found partiality in education—witness the exclusion of Eurasians and Anglo-Indians from Roorkee College; recklessness in regard to local self-government—witness the desire to abolish all responsible control narrowness in the encouragement of private enterprise—witness the paltry proportion of Government stores allowed to be tendered for in India; and feebleness in the development of the resources of the country—witness the poor progress made; while important duties have been abolished to please the supporters of the political party in power. The export duty on rice, which at times exceeds 14 per cent. and bears heavily on the poor ryots, is maintained, and bills have been introduced to deprive European British subjects of their birthright and the zemindars of their proprietary rights. We have reason to pray that India be not governed in the interest of a political party, but for the true welfare of its inhabitants, of all colours, castes, and creeds. We, Britons, respect the rights and privileges peculiar to the natives, and most natives, still respect ours, and recognise that it is possible for a large share in the government of the country to be given to them without it being necessary to deprive a few thousand scattered Europeans of the much cherished right of being tried by their own Christian countrymen. Let us hope, then, that the Government will withdraw these unnecessary and inconsiderate measures. The announcement of their withdrawal may be appropriately made on the Viceroy's arrival to-morrow, and so set the public mind at rest, that, freed from an impending calamity, it may again be devoted to those peaceful pursuits which build up the wealth and strength of the nation, and that the breach between the Government and the community may be closed, so that both may unite in welcoming the Queen's son and in celebrating the first international exhibition ever held in India."

"Many other speeches of great interest were delivered."

"The incident of the Scotch dinner and the cold reception of the Viceroy yesterday clearly prove that the agitation against the Ilbert Bill, far from subsiding, is daily gaining strength. The feeling regarding Lord Ripon may be described as one of exasperation, and is mainly due to three causes—first, the belief that he personally is responsible for the persistent forcing on of the measure; secondly, the contemptuous disregard he has shown for all but unanimous public opinion; thirdly, the reticence which from first to last has prevented his taking the public into his confidence and has left the first announcement of the proposed modifications for a speech of Lord Northbrook's at an English provincial town. Now, it is well known that the question of withdrawing or proceeding with the Bill was discussed by the Executive Council shortly before the debate of March 9. Only the Viceroy and Mr. Ilbert were for proceeding with the measure at all hazards; the Commander in Chief, General Wilson, and Sir E. Baring proposed its eventual withdrawal, time being allowed to save appearances; while Sir Stuart Bayley and Mr. Hope urged that delay would only increase the difficulties, and suggested immediate withdrawal. The pledge, implied if not expressed, to submit the official opinions to Parliament which the Viceroy gave on March 9, might have been redeemed before the end of the session, so far at least as the majority of these opinions was concerned, had they been sent home when received. Now it is semi-officially stated that Lord Ripon is personally anxious to postpone further discussion of the Bill till Parliament meets, but has received or expects positive orders from the Cabinet to proceed at once. It is difficult to conceive that the Viceroy of India should look to the Secretary of State for orders on such a matter as advancing a stage or postponing a measure of municipal legislation pending in his own Council, or that the successor of Dalhousie and Canning should have degraded himself to the position of a subservient registering clerk of the edicts of a Minister."

"During last week many indignation meetings were held in various parts of the country. I can do no more than mention the names of a few of the more prominent places which have thus testified their feelings—namely, Simla, Delhi, Mirzapore, Mozufferpore, Bhaugulpore, Dibrughur, Lakimpore, and Moulmein."

"The Duke of Connaught assumed command of the Meerut Division on Monday, relieving General Bright. He has obtained twelve days' leave for his visit to Calcutta. He left Meerut on Friday, and arrives here to-morrow morning. Great preparations are being made for his reception, and a large sum has been collected. An address from all classes of the community will be presented, and the Duke has signified his desire to receive it at Government House. He will accompany the Viceroy to the opening of the exhibition on Tuesday. Another important feature of the rejoicings will be the illuminations on Thursday."

"The exhibition is still in a very incomplete state, but the opening ceremony will be held on Tuesday afternoon. The Viceroy and the Duke will be received at the entrance and conducted over the buildings by the Lieutenant Governor, should his health permit. Unfortunately, Mr. Thompson has been unwell ever since his return to Calcutta, and it is doubtful whether he will be able to attend Tuesday's pageant."

"The Civil and Military Gazette gives some news of the progress of General Kennedy's exploring expedition to Takht-i-Suleiman. The force got through the Zao Pass, finding the road very difficult, and reached Zao Tangi on the 22nd; from that point the Takht seemed to have dreadful precipices on all sides. On the 23rd they reached Kash Magari, fourteen miles further. Here the road was better, but the country was bare, ugly, and uncultivated.

"Sir R. Sandeman's mission to Southern Beloochistan is progressing favourably. Since leaving Sibi on the 20th ult. it has been everywhere well received. Sir R. Sandeman has with him 400 troops of all arms, and the Jelawan and Sarawan Sirdars, besides the Muzer of the Khan of Khelat."

"To-day's newspapers contain articles on the reception of the Viceroy on Saturday, and generally recognise the dangerous state of tension to which public feeling has been wrought by the tortuous policy of the last few months. For the first time in the history of British India a Viceroy has been publicly hissed by Europeans in the presence of natives. The demonstration which occurred outside the Government House on Saturday is greatly regretted, and by none more than by the leaders of the Opposition, who, together with the provincial authorities, did their best to prevent any show of dislike. The fact that their efforts proved futile shows how deeply the feeling of injury has penetrated, and how great is the danger of the lower orders of Europeans getting out of hand. The Viceroy will make a statement regarding the Ilbert Bill at Friday's Council meeting, and there is still room to hope that this statement may be satisfactory. Crowded meetings which were held at Lahore and Allahabad on Saturday expressed disapproval of Lord Northbrook's proposed compromise.

"The spontaneous outburst of loyalty which greeted the arrival of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught this morning afforded a remarkable contrast to the cold reception accorded the Viceroy on Saturday, and made it very clear—if, indeed, it was ever doubted—that while Lord Ripon's policy has drawn upon him the dislike of the European community, it has in no way affected their sense of loyal duty to the Crown.

"From an early hour the shipping in the river was dressed with bunting, and the streets along which the Royal party was to pass were thronged with a motley crowd of all classes and rendered gay with flags. The Howrah terminus of the East Indian Railway was also decorated, and a guard of honour of the Railway Volunteers was drawn up on the platform. The waiting room had been fitted as a reception room and was crowded with European ladies and gentlemen, including all the most prominent members of the non-official community.

"The train arrived at a few minutes after eight. The Duke and Duchess, who were accompanied by the Governor of Bombay, immediately alighted, and were received by the military secretary and aide-de-camp of the Viceroy. After inspecting the guard they passed through the reception room, where they were greeted with loud and prolonged cheers, which their Royal Highnesses graciously acknowledged. A little girl presented a bouquet, and the ladies and children strewed flowers before the illustrious pair.

"Entering a Viceregal carriage, the party drove to Government House, under Royal salute, the spectators along the route cheering vociferously, especially a body of Europeans stationed on the Hooghly Bridge. As on Saturday, so to-day, the Calcutta Volunteers had been invited to form a guard of honour at Government House, and their manner of responding to the two invitations showed plainly the different feeling with which they regard the Viceroy and the Duke. On Saturday only 343 attended, of whom 160 were cadets and nearly all the rest officials. To-day almost the entire strength of the regiment paraded. The mounted company alone mustered sixty-five, and the total number could not have fallen short of 900. The space usually allowed to the guard of honour proved to be insufficient, and the Volunteers had to be arranged on both sides of the entrance, and the officials and native gentlemen present on the steps of Government House. But the non-officials, as a rule, preferred to express their loyalty elsewhere.

"The Viceroy having received the Duke and Duchess, an address of welcome from all classes was presented to them by the chairman of the Corporation. The Prince made a suitable reply, and referred to the cordial reception given in that building to his two elder brothers."

THE same correspondent, dated Calcutta, Dec. 4, telegraphs as follows:—

"The first International Exhibition ever held in India was opened this afternoon in a series of most depressing circumstances. In the first place, the day was wet and gloomy; and as rain at the beginning of December is almost unprecedented in Calcutta, no adequate precautions had been taken to guard against the weather, and the spectators had been reduced to a state of the utmost discomfort before the proceedings began. The strained relations between the Government and the Anglo-Indian community were the more evident from the marked absence of non-officials; and the fact that severe illness had compelled the Lieutenant Governor to absent himself threw a shadow over the scene, which not even the presence of Royalty could dispel.

"The ceremony was held in the central courtyard of the Museum, and had we been favoured with the usual December weather no better place could have been selected. The rain, however, soon penetrated the thin awning overhead, and before the people began to arrive all the seats were wet. A few banners, hung around on the walls, were the only attempts at decoration. A dais (marble-coloured) had been erected in the centre and the spectators were grouped on either hand of it; the Europeans on the right, the natives on the left.

"By four o'clock the courtyard was fairly well filled, especially on the native side. The other side showed many blank spaces, and the non-official members of society, ladies as well gentlemen, were conspicuous by their absence.

"The Viceregal party, with the Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Governor of Bombay, arrived at about half-past four, and walking up the centre of the assemblage, took their seats on the dais. The proceedings commenced by the choir singing an Italian cantata composed for the occasion. The Bishop of Calcutta then offered prayers, after which Colonel Trevor, Vice President of the Executive Committee, read an account of the rise and progress of the scheme, and in the absence of the Lieutenant Governor, requested the Viceroy to declare the Exhibition open.

"Lord Ripon replied at some length. He commenced by deploring the absence of the Lieutenant Governor, who had originated the scheme and displayed a lively interest in it from the first. He went on to express his gratification at the presence of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, and read a telegram from the Queen conveying Her Majesty's best wishes for the success of the exhibition. The Marquis said that he hoped the exhibition would prove a source of lasting benefit to India, especially in promoting trade with the Australian colonies, a trade which, he believed, had a great future before it. He ended by quoting from a speech of the Prince Consort, and then declared the exhibition open.

"A fanfare of trumpets followed and an attempt was made to light the building by the electric light, which, however, unfortunately failed through some defect in the machinery, and left the spectators to disperse in darkness. Thus ended the opening ceremony.

"A stranger looking at the assemblage in the Museum to-day would, perhaps, have pronounced it to be fairly large and representative. But any one knowing Calcutta could not fail to remark the almost entire absence of the leading citizens. One more was added to the many proofs which we have had during the last few days of the breach between the Government and the independent portion of the community which recent events have brought about. That breach is daily widening, and if the Government persists in its present policy it will become complete. With unabated loyalty to the Queen and every wish to do honour to Her Majesty's son, Anglo-Indians are determined to stand aloof from the Viceroy so long as he refuses to abandon a policy which they consider degrading and dangerous. The issue rests with Lord Ripon. A word from him when he makes his statement next Friday will close the breach completely. If that word be not spoken the responsibility will lie primarily with the Viceroy, and in a hardly less degree with those of his counsellors who are prepared to make a sacrifice of their convictions, and to vote for a measure which in their hearts they disapprove.

"The exact number of Volunteers who attended yesterday as a guard of honour for the Duke and Duchess of Connaught was 729. This was the largest parade ever known since the regiment was formed."

A REUTER'S telegram, dated Calcutta, Dec. 3, states:—

"The surveying expedition to Takht-i-Suleiman has been attacked by Ghazis. Twenty of the assailants were killed. There were no casualties in Major Holdich's force."

FROM the Daily News correspondent, Teheran, Dec. 3:—

"Seyid Hassan, a native of Meshed, and recently a refugee in Merv, is preaching a Holy War against Russia. He has assembled a large number of Turcomans and entered Khorassan. He intends marching on Askabad after the capture of Kalatnadi. The Persian Government is sending troops against him."

"A letter from Meshed, dated 23rd ult., states that the Mussulman fanatic Khaf Seyd, who arrived at Merv at the end of October, subsequently left that place and, travelling by the Merv road, entered Persian territory at the head of a rabble of two thousand Turcomans. Another small body of Turcomans has entered Persian territory by way of Zurabad, and a third in the neighbourhood of Kelat. The three bands are reported to be slowly advancing towards Meshed, where perfect order prevails, although considerable anxiety is felt, giving rise to exaggerated reports. The Turcomans are stated to be badly armed, the muskets they have being of a converted pattern. Persian troops have been sent to stop their progress, and the Governor of Khorassan has also marched against them. It is, however, reported at Meshed that the Persian troops retreat as Khaf Seyd advances. Detachments of infantry and artillery are about to be despatched from Teheran to Khorassan. Some Turcomans on a pilgrimage to Meshed have passed through several villages without plundering.

"Ayoub Khan will travel to Bokhara via Tabzvar and Kuchan. He has signed a promise to that effect, and will leave Teheran shortly. A letter from Herat, dated Nov. 10, reports that the Heratis, having heard of Ayoub Khan's approaching departure from Teheran, are strengthening the defences of the town, fully expecting that he will march against Herat. It is generally supposed here that Ayoub Khan will not go to Bokhara, but will make another attempt to seize Herat. The Russian agent at Meshed has interceded with the Governor of Herat in order to obtain the release of Muhammed Sadyk Khan, his correspondent at that place, who was recently arrested. The Governor, however, replied that he must await instructions from the Ameer of Afghanistan on the subject."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

MR. H. G. KEENE ON THE HISTORY OF SOME INDIAN DISTRICTS DURING THE MUTINY.*

The many admirers of the "Fall of the Mughal Empire" will learn with pleasure that the accomplished author of that work has re-published, in a collected form, his entertaining papers on the Indian districts during the Mutiny, that have recently appeared from time to time in the pages of the Army and Navy Magazine. We have already directed the attention of our readers to these valuable materials for history, which are often of thrilling interest, and enriched with numerous personal reminiscences. Mr. Keene has now added a preface, in which he indicates the peculiar characteristics of the Mutiny history of those districts of the Upper Provinces in which the revolt was for a time triumphant, and where, nevertheless, the civil administration was never for any length of time set aside by military operations. It was in these districts that the vigour and intrepidity of such Bengal civilians as Spankie, Dunlop, and Keene, kept alive the flickering flame of empire; and much of Mr. Keene's present work is devoted, with singular modesty and self-abnegation, to a generous record of the wise and heroic deeds of his old colleagues in Upper India.

The moral which Mr. Keene draws from the events of the stirring period he describes, is worth quoting:—

"Two lessons, at least, may be drawn from the record. One is that, whatever posts are hereafter to be made available to Asiatics, there is one which—save in the most peaceful and orderly of neighbourhoods, perhaps—should always be reserved to men of European birth and training; I mean, of course, that of district officer. It is sufficient to reflect what might have been the consequences had districts like Saharanpur, Meerut, or Etawa been in the hands of Asiatics during the time that is here treated of. With the greatest loyalty and goodwill, Asiatic officers would be always likely to fall into one of two temptations. Either they would show weakness, or they would act with undue severity. Nothing but the combination of impartial humanity with an unimpressible firmness could possibly have nerved Spankie, Dunlop, Hume, and their contemporary district officers, with the will and power to make head against all the troubles of their position, and to restore order and confidence at the earliest available moment. The careers of de Boigne, Thomas, Perron, and other adventurers of the last century—no less than that of Avitabile under Rangit Surgh—show how much this truth was appreciated even by the comparatively uncivilised rulers to whom India was subject then. And it would be a deplorable error if this lesson were to be ignored or neglected now by a Government which, in a much greater degree, has undertaken to regenerate a region so long demoralised by anarchy as Hindustan. If the native powers had to employ European administrators, how much more must Britain!

"The other lesson to be heedfully appropriated is the necessity of a just and discriminate use of native talent and loyalty. In most, if not all, of the districts here observed, it will be clear that the exertions of the British district officers and their European associates—heroic, as we need not hesitate to call them—were only rendered effective by the co-operation of Asiatics, military and civil."

PROFESSOR WILLIAMS'S "MIDDLE KINGDOM" *
Not Sinologues alone, but the whole reading public will thank Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., for the superb edition, revised and brought up to date by the learned author, which they have just published, of this standard work on the geography, government, literature, social life, arts, and history of the Chinese Empire and its inhabitants. Since the first edition of "The

* "The Middle Kingdom.—A Survey of the Geography, Government, Literature, Social Life, Arts, and History of the Chinese Empire and its Inhabitants." By S. WELLS WILLIAMS, LL.D., Professor of the Chinese Language and Literature at Yale College; Author of Tonic and Syllabic Dictionaries of the Chinese Language. Revised Edition, with Illustrations, and a New Map of the Empire. London: W. H. Allen and Co., 1883.

Middle Kingdom" was issued, some thirty-five years ago, China has changed more completely than in any previous century of her history; and it is only because of the remarkable fixity of Chinese social habits, and Chinese principles of Government, that any portion of Professor Williams's original work can now be presented to the public without complete re-writing. But he now really treats of a new country; for China is a reformed, and in many respects a highly-modernised nation, whilst its continued progress, day by day, and year by year, is still most remarkable.

Our author well remarks:—

"Under the new regime, the central administration has radically increased its authority among the provincial rulers, and more than ever in former years has managed to maintain control over their pretensions. The Empire has, moreover, established its foreign relations on a well-understood basis by accredited envoys; this will soon affect the mass of the people by the greater facilities of trade, the presence of travellers, diffusion of education, and other agencies, which are awaking the people from their lethargy. Already the influences which will gradually transform the face of society, are mightily operating."

It must be clear to the least observant in England, that the nation which is now so ably represented in Western Europe by the Marquis Tseng, is a nation altogether different in kind—so far, at least, as its place in the comity of nations is concerned—from that which, only a few years ago, regarded Englishmen and Frenchmen so only as many "red-headed foreign devils." Then again, the researches of European residents and travellers in China have during the last thirty-five entirely revolutionised our knowledge of the geography and natural history of the country, and to a large extent of its literature, language, history, and laws.

Not the least interesting part of the handsome volumes before us is that which gives a succinct account of the events and momentous results of the great Tai-Ping rebellion—events which, as Professor Williams justly observes, "have forced one of the greatest nations of the world into her proper position." And the growth of Christian Missions in the country, and the extension of the foreign commerce, are each subjects that will attract the special attention of a large number of readers.

The publication of these two volumes, which condense into a manageable compass all the trustworthy information that is possessed of the Chinese Empire, has happened most opportunely at the very moment when the Franco-Chinese difficulty is exercising the minds of our statesmen and economists, and causing general inquiry for authentic accounts, in regard to much that is strange to those who have had no personal acquaintance with the Middle Kingdom. The works of Richthofen, Yule, Legge, and others, will still be consulted for detailed information about special branches of the subject; but the work of Professor Williams, a resident in China during no less than forty-three years, is really encyclopædic in its scope, and will certainly be henceforward the standard work of reference for the general inquirer. We ought to add that the illustrations are admirably executed in that beautiful style with which Messrs. Allen's productions have lately made us familiar; and the large map which will be found at the end of the second volume, is valuable not only for the eighteen provinces, but also for the whole of Central Asia.

MARGARET FULLER.*

THE latest volume of the "Eminent Women" series, edited by John H. Ingram, and published by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., is a well-written biography of Margaret Fuller, the friend of Ralph Waldo Emerson, by Julia Ward Howe. To English readers, there will be much of novelty and interest in this life-story of a clever American authoress; and the account of her sojourn in London is rendered especially attractive by anecdotes of her friendship with Carlyle. This is what Carlyle wrote of her to Emerson:—

"Margaret is an excellent soul: in real regard with both of us here. Since she went, I have been reading some of her papers, in a new book we have got: greatly superior to all I knew before: in fact, the undeniable utterances (now first undeniable to me) of a truly heroic mind; altogether unique, so far as I know, among the writing women of this generation; rare enough, too, God knows, among the writing men. She is very narrow, sometimes, but she is truly high. Honour to Margaret, and more and more good speed to her."

CORRESPONDENCE.

BRITISH BURMA.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—I solicit your attention to the able report of Mr. J. E. O'Connor, on the trade of British India, for the year ending the 31st March last.

In your paper of the 19th of April, last year, I endeavoured to show how the wealth of India would be enormously increased by abolishing the objectionable export tax of rice; there are millions of acres in Burma and India lying uncultivated, swampy, and malarious, which could be made to produce food for millions of souls in all parts of the world, if Government would remove a tax, which, it has itself confessed, is indefensible.

The Editor of the Allahabad Pioneer Mail, in his paper of the 31st ultimo., calls this export tax the worst of all the duties as far as India is concerned.

And Mr. O'Connor, the best official authority on Indian trade in the British Empire, writes :—

"No change was made in the export duty on rice, the last relic of a bad system. It is to be hoped that the state of the finances will, before long, permit of the removal of this blot upon the Indian fiscal system, and allow the Indian rice grower to carry his grain to a foreign market free from taxation."

Our Government frequently cries out that it has not sufficient population in British Burma; that immense tracts of fertile land remain waste, owing to want of men to cultivate it. There will be a rush of people into Burma as soon as Government shall have ceased to prolong its present bad policy of placing impediments in the way of selling the staple crop, rice, to hungry nations anxious to buy it.—Your obedient servant, Nov. 24. T.

I beg also to refer you to your papers of Dec. 3 and 8, 1877,—"Export Duties." The export tax on indigo and shellac has since then been abolished, and the trade in shellac has enormously increased.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

MR. DACOSTA AND MISS FLORENCE NIGHTINGALE ON THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE leading English Reviews have, it would seem, made it a practice of late to publish in juxtaposition papers representing both sides of the question. The October number of the Nineteenth Century and the Contemporary Review are instances in point. The October number of the Nineteenth Century contains two articles on Indian policy by two distinguished Indian personages—Sir James Stephen and Sir Evelyn Baring. Similarly, the October number of the Contemporary Review contains two articles on the Bengal Tenancy Bill from the pens of Mr. Dacosta and Miss Florence Nightingale. We have read both the articles carefully, and we are glad that they have been given in juxtaposition in the same number of the Review. As might be expected, Mr. Dacosta is thoroughly practical and logical, while Miss Florence Nightingale is sentimental and illogical. Mr. Dacosta could not, of course, anticipate what Miss Nightingale would write; still on several important points he has anticipated her. Miss Nightingale's article is an abridgement of her sensational paper on the subject read at the East Indian Association. Miss Nightingale's paper, we are constrained to say, is a tissue of misstatements and misrepresentations. We will give a few instances. Miss Nightingale thus interprets the contract of the Permanent Settlement :—

"By the Permanent Settlement a contract was made with the zemindars, of which the following were the principal terms : 1. No arbitrary cesses are to be levied by the zemindar; 2. Taxes or revenue are to be paid by the zemindar; 3. Only on condition that the zemindars do not raise their rents is the revenue they are to pay not to be raised; 4. The zemindar is to undertake roads, lesser public works, &c.; 5. The zemindar is to give leases."

Is this a correct interpretation? Where is the regulation which declares that "taxes" are to be paid by the zemindar alone? Are all "taxes" levied upon the ryot illegal? Then we are told that the zemindars are to make roads. Where is this compact? Again, the zemindar is prohibited from raising rents. If so, why do the courts give decrees for increase of rent? We ask whether a public writer, who can deliberately make such mis-statements, is worthy of public confidence? Take another instance. Miss Nightingale justly denounces illegal cesses; we are quite at one with her on this subject. But strange to say that, while condemning Bengal, she quotes Orissa, where cesses in the worst form are levied, though there is no Permanent Settlement in Orissa. So much for her facts. Take a third instance. Miss Nightingale says :—

"Let us now look at a few revenue figures. The revenue in 1793 (at the time of the Permanent Settlement) was about three millions; the zemindar's share was one-tenth or one-eleventh of the revenue. In three-quarters of a century the Government revenue has increased to three and a-half millions, while the zemindars' rental has grown from about a third of a million gross to more than thirteen millions net. But this rental of thirteen millions is only an official return for road cess purposes, and the entire amount paid annually by the occupants of the soil is said to be between twenty-five and thirty millions. We have given away a land revenue of all India; for we have allowed between twenty-five and thirty millions, reckoning illegal exactions, &c., to be extorted from the cultivators of the soil, out of which Government receives instead of nine-tenths or ten-elevenths—the rule at the Permanent Settlement—about one-eighth."

The Road Cess returns show thirteen millions land profits—Miss Nightingale says they must be twenty-five millions! Has she any idea of the nature of the Road Cess returns? If the zemindar makes an under-statement, the law is that he must take the consequences of his own act, that is to say, he shall not be competent to demand more from the ryot than what he may enter against him in his return. What could be a better check upon under-statement of his receipts by a zemindar than this outlawry clause. And yet Miss Nightingale glibly tells the British public that though the Road Cess returns show the land profits at thirteen millions, they actually amount to twenty-five millions! But the whole of these thirteen millions does not go to the pockets of the zemindars. We have in three successive issues of August last given the financial status of the zemindars who pay revenue direct, and their average income does not exceed 50 per cent. of the revenue they pay. Below the zemindars there is a host of middlemen, who absorb a large portion of the profits. Then the receipts of the ryots are also included in the returns. It will be thus seen that of the thirteen millions of land profits scarcely one-fourth represents the income of the zemindars, and yet Miss Nightingale tells us that the rapacious zemindars make twenty-five millions a year! Does the reader want further proof of the utter groundlessness of the assertions of Miss Nightingale? She admits that the ryots of Madras and Bombay, who are peasant proprietors, are badly off, and yet she won't admit that the ryots of Bengal under the Permanent Settlement are better off. Miss Nightingale is, however, constrained to admit that the Bill will not materially help the actual cultivators of the soil. She says :—

"Another question started against the new Bill—viz., that it may, by making the tenure valuable, create middlemen, whether money-lenders, or larger ryots, who will grind down the ryots more than is done already by the zemindars—is a very serious consideration. This hits, in fact, what is perhaps the weakest part of the Bengal Rent Bill as drafted. It seems to have been found difficult to deprive a ryot, and apparently the privileges are to be conferred on those who are borne on the books as ryots, without prohibition of sub-letting to unprotected cultivators. In Ireland the 'fixities' are given to the actual cultivator. In the Bengal Bill this does not seem to be so. The ryot is already not unfrequently a sort of small landlord, with tenantry under him; and it is possible that when his rights are well defined, we might more and more have small landlords under the name of ryots, as is the case in some other parts of India. Temporary sub-lettings, in cases of minority and the like, must perhaps be specially permitted. But if we aim at peasant proprietors, rather than small landlords, great care must be taken in settling the details of the Bill in committee. The provisions of the Bill certainly gives the occupancy tenant the right to sell or sub-let. But these can have no new or startling effect in the direction indicated, because the justification for them is, that wherever there is a margin of rent the universal custom in Bengal is to sub-let already. Besides, it must be remembered that by the practice of sub-infeudation, the Bengal zemindars have already created middlemen to a vast extent."

The subinfeudation system involves the greatest wrong to the ryot, and yet the manifest tendency of the Bill is to convert the occupancy ryot into a middleman and to reduce a bond fide cultivator to downright slavery. So much for the protection of the interests of the actual cultivators under the Bill. At the end of the article Miss Nightingale says :—

"One word on behalf of the zemindar; a word which will not cancel one single syllable written on behalf of the ryot. The present race of zemindars have—every one of them—taken their places in a system which can exist only in continuous breach of a contract to which they individually were none of them parties; a breach which must have been known to the Government who were a party, and who are ultimately, if not solely, responsible for allowing it to continue."

What does this statement suggest—compensation to the zemindar for disturbance of his rights, and yet she has not the candour to say it boldly and openly?

We have said that Mr. Dacosta's paper is thoroughly practical and logical. He first describes the condition of the ryot in Madras and Bombay under the Ryotwari settlement, and in the North-Western Provinces under the thirty years' settlement. He writes :—

"The severity of famines has forcibly drawn public attention to the destitute condition of the agricultural classes over a great portion of our Indian Empire. Deficient harvests during two successive years sufficed to cause the death of millions of inhabitants from starvation, although millions of public money were meanwhile expended in endeavours to relieve distress. This occurred in the Madras and Bombay Presidencies in 1876 and 1877, and the North-Western Provinces of India were soon afterwards overtaken by the same scourge. The destitution which thus results periodically in famine among the people, and in heavy pecuniary losses to the Government, proceeds from the fact that the produce of the land is insufficient to satisfy the two principal demands that are made upon it when the crops are matured—namely, the collector's demand for land revenue, and the money-lender's claim for the advances made by him. The latter claim is greatly swollen by the high rate of interest required to cover the risk of loans when the borrowers are men living in a permanent state of penury, and their fields can afford but little security to their creditors, in consequence of the land in the above-mentioned provinces being periodically liable to arbitrary enhancements of the revenue demand. Under such circumstances the cultivator, even after a favourable season, is left without any surplus to lay by for deficient harvests, and he lives in a hopeless state of want, indebtedness, and discouragement. The foregoing remarks apply more especially to the Madras and Bombay Presidencies, where the land is divided into smallholdings. The remedial measures adopted in the latter province have failed in their object, because they ignored the main cause of the evil, which is the oppressive and arbitrary character of the revenue demand. The Agriculturists' Relief Act, based on the assumption that the exactions of the money-lender had impoverished the ryot, aggravated the position of the latter by driving away the native bankers; and the reductions in the revenue assessments, ultimately tried, have proved of little avail because no security against future arbitrary enhancements was simultaneously offered. In Madras the impoverishment of the cultivating tenants has attracted the attention of the authorities by the increasing severity to which it has been necessary to resort in the collection of the revenue, and by the increasing number of farms that have annually been sold for arrears. In the North Western Provinces, where the estates are of considerable extent, things are also in a deplorable condition. The collector of Cawnpore, speaking of the cultivating classes in the Doab, said:—"The margin left for the cultivator's subsistence is less than the value of the labour he has expended on the land. This district has the benefit of water communication by both the Ganges and the Jumna; it is intersected by the East Indian Railway, and is partly traversed by the Ganges Canal; yet the land is only worth five years' purchase, and the state of the average cultivator is one of hopeless insolvency and misery."

He then draws attention to the material condition of the peasantry of Bengal:—

"In Bengal, on the other hand, an entirely different state of things prevails. The rice crops in that province failed in 1873-74, and a severe famine was apprehended; but the reserved means possessed by the peasantry, added to the assistance of the Government, enabled the people to tide over the season of scarcity without the occurrence of any famine mortality, and while large remissions of land revenue had to be made in consequence of the famine in Madras and Bombay, no remission whatever was necessary in Bengal, the landholders there having been able to pay in full the revenue of the year of scarcity, 1873-74. This great difference arises from the circumstance that the land revenue assessments in Bengal being fixed in perpetuity, capital could be freely applied to the development of agriculture, without its fruit being exposed, as in the other provinces, to be absorbed in the revenue demand, at the revision of the assessment."

We have neither time nor space to go into a detailed discussion of the Bill, which Mr. Dacosta has followed up so intelligently and ably, but we think he hits the right point when he says that the present Bill, far from affording relief to the ryots, will only pave the way to the imposition of additional taxation upon them. We will take another opportunity to discuss this point.—Hindoo Patriot.

THE RENT BILL AND THE ZEMINDARS.

(From the "Indian Review.")

THE Bengal Tenancy Bill is one of the burning questions of the hour. It is not my intention to say much as to the historical or legal aspect of the question; that has already received considerable attention from the members of the Rent Commission and others. The minutes of Lord Cornwallis and Mr. Shore make up the principal part of what is known as the literature of the Permanent Settlement, and there is more in that literature favourable to the claims of the zemindars than to those of the ryots. Partisans of either side have, perhaps, been equally successful in extracting therefrom isolated passages which favour their respective theories and propositions. But the whole of the Fifth Report, taken together, establishes beyond a doubt that the zemindars were regarded as proprietors of the soil long before the Permanent Settlement, and that, at that time, the condition of the ryots was in many respects deplorable.

The zemindars were certainly not mere tax-gatherers immediately before the Permanent Settlement. Had such been the case, minors and females would not have succeeded. The farmers and sub-farmers under them may more properly be termed tax-gatherers. Mr. Shore says, in paragraph 370 of his minute of 1789:—"I consider the zemindars as the proprietors of the soil, to the property of which they succeed by right of inheritance, according to the laws of their own religion, and that the sovereign authority cannot justly exercise the power of depriving them of the succession, nor of altering it, when there are any legal heirs. The privilege of disposing of the land by sale or mortgage is derived from this fundamental right, and was exercised by the zemindars before we acquired the Dewanny." There are many other passages which it is unnecessary to reproduce. Lord Cornwallis, in his minute of the 18th September 1789, refers to them as follows:—"Mr. Shore has most ably and in my opinion, most successfully, in his minute delivered in June last, argued in favour of the rights of the zemindars to the property of the soil." The zemindars exercised many other rights also, such as the collection of dues in gunges, bazars, and hâts.

As for the ryots, theoretically their position may have been good; but in reality this was not the case. Mr. Shore, in paragraph 233 of his minute of June 1789, says:—"The arbitrary impositions of the zemindars are generally measured by the supposed ability of the ryots to pay them." Again:—"The rights of the ryots appear very uncertain and indefinite." (Paragraph 388, ibid.) "When the rents by successive impositions become too heavy, the ryots either abscond, or the zemindar allows them a compensation by giving them other land at a favourable rate; but seldom by remitting either the imposts or diminishing the rates of the other lands." (Paragraph 397.) "The zemindar in general enter into no engagements with the ryots, but collect what they can. . . . The impositions are said to be numerous and unascertainable, and the want of engagements renders it impossible to detect abuser." (Paragraph 419.) Again, in another place, Mr. Shore says:—"We know also that the zemindars continually impose new cesses upon their ryots, and having subverted the fundamental rules of collection, measure their exactions by the abilities of the ryots to pay."

The practical aspect of the rent question arises from the following passage in section 8 of Regulation I of 1793:—"It being the duty of the ruling power to protect all classes of people, and more particularly those who, from their situation, are most helpless; the Governor-General in Council will, whenever he may deem it proper, enact such regulations as he may think necessary for the protection and welfare of the dependent talukdar, ryots, and other cultivators of the soil; and no zemindar independent talukdar, or other actual proprietor of land shall be entitled on this account to make any objection to the discharge of the fixed assessment which they have respectively agreed to pay." In pursuance of this provision was passed Act 10 of 1859, which has very rightly been called the Magna Charta of the Bengal ryot. Act 10 has made the Bengal ryot what he is at the present day. Now the practical question for consideration is, what is the state of the ryots in Bengal at the present time? Is it bad or good? Are the tenantry prosperous and thriving, or are they poor, rack-rented, and at the mercy of their landlords? Are the relations of landlord and tenant such as to call for special legislation? It cannot be denied that Act 10 of 1859 requires alteration and amendment in certain particulars, and I would advocate the addition of a few substantive provisions to the existing rent law; but it is the deliberate and decided opinion of men who have an intimate knowledge of the country and the people that the Bengal Tenancy Bill has gone far beyond the necessities of the case. Many of its provisions unfairly curtail, and in some cases destroy, the undoubted rights of the zemindars, and there are parts of the Bill that are mischievous and likely to bring about most embittered relations between landlords and tenants.

The right of occupancy requires to be placed on a more definite and certain footing; exchange of pottas and kulooliats, and the giving of proper receipts should be insisted on; the obstacles in the way of legitimate enhancements of rent should be removed, and the zemindars should be given some means of collecting their rents in a more speedy and summary manner. These are the only important changes required in the rent law, and I advocate the passing of a Bill dealing with these points; but the Bill before the Legislature creates matter for litigation. The ryots never thought of, or asked for, the benefits that the Bill seeks to confer on them. If the Bill be passed in its present shape it will inflict enormous injury on the zemindars, and reduce the value of their estates by at least 50 per cent., and at the same time it will plunge the landowning classes into bitter and ruinous litigation.

To come to the provisions of the Bill, chapter 2 relates to khamar and raiyati land, and is a good example of the litigation-creating character of the Bill. The mischief which the Legislature desires to remedy is that some landlords, principally petty maliks in the province of Behar, call all their land their own zirat or khamar with the object of preventing the accrual of rights of occupancy. But the obvious way to deal with the evil is to enact that a right of occupancy may accrue in every sort of land, provided the land be really let to a cultivator for a money-rent, or a portion of the crop. Such a provision would be far simpler, and at the same time fairer, to the zemindars. Zemindars would then be aware of the exact manner in which and time after which khamar land would become raiyati land. But the Bill enacts that all land shall be presumed to be raiyati until the contrary is proved; and when once the existing khamar land has been surveyed and entered in a register, no addition can be made to it. Does this mean that all the culturable and unculturable waste in an estate is to be considered raiyati land? If so, it is difficult to see with what justice, on what principle, or for what reason, a land-owner is to be deprived of his property in what is sometimes the most valuable portion of his estate. I venture to think the provisions about survey and registration of khamar lands will be a fruitful source of expense and litigation. There may be an appeal against any entry from the Collector to the Commissioner, then to the Board of Revenue, and lastly to the local government.

The chapter relating to tenure-holders is not objectionable. While re-enacting the existing law, it makes some desirable additions. The presumption from twenty years holding at an unchanged rent was, of course, quite inapplicable to the circumstances of a temporarily-settled province, such as Orissa. However, claims, to hold at a fixed rent have been entertained by the courts in Orissa, and there are not a few ryots who now hold decrees declaring their rent not liable to enhancement. Quite apart from the present Bill, I was always of opinion that a Settlement Officer, on the expiry of the present settlement, would not only be justified, but would be bound to treat such decrees as so much waste paper. The revenue paid by the landlord is liable to enhancement, and it would be absurd if he were not entitled to levy such enhancement from his ryots.

The extension of the occupancy right diminishes the profits of the zemindars, and for this reason the new provisions should not have a retrospective effect. This is the least that the zemindars can demand. But it appears to me that very good cause may be shown why the occupancy right should not be extended so far as it has been. It is only human nature that zemindars should attempt to prevent the accrual of occupancy rights. Every man wishes to increase his income, or at least to prevent its diminution, and the acquisition of an occupancy right in a certain portion of a zemindar's land means that, quoad that piece of land, he is prospectively a poorer man; for the future it will yield him a rent of five rupees only, whereas, but for the occupancy right, it might speedily have yielded him ten, and after some time even fifteen rupees. Is it, then, a matter for wonder that the zemindar should complain that the Legislature should, by one stroke of the pen, raise almost the whole body of his tenants to the position of co-proprietors? And when I use the word "co-proprietors," I do not mean that the rights of the zemindar and the ryot in the land will be merely equal; the settled ryot may be termed twelve-anna proprietor, while the zemindar is but a four-anna annuitant. What, then, is the evil against which the Legislature wishes to provide? It is that at present an occupancy ryot has to prove his right in each field or plot he holds, and that the landlord prevents the acquisition of rights of occupancy by shifting new tenants from one holding to another before the period of twelve years has run out. I believe this is done only in Bebar, and that only in the case of new comers (see the statement of objects and reasons appended to the Bill). Old tenants in Bengal would resist any attempt to shift them by going into court. Indeed, speaking generally, I do not believe that such attempts are ever made. In my opinions it should be left to the courts to decide in each case as to who is a settled ryot. If the court finds that the ryot has substantially held a certain quantity of land in a certain village for twelve years, it should decree his right of occupancy; and where the ryot has shifted his holding within the same village, the onus should be thrown on the zemindar of proving that he had not shifted the ryot with intent to prevent his acquiring an occupancy right. The unit for the acquisition of an occupancy right should be the village and not the estate. The latter would bring about the most extraordinary and unlooked-for results. Some estates are situated in as many as three or four different districts, and it is by no means uncommon for the same estate to be scattered over several pergunnahs in the same districts or two adjoining districts. Moreover the Bill enacts that the estate is to be taken to be the estate as it existed on the first day of January, 1883, no matter how many partitions may since have taken place. The following example may be given of a very possible result of the provisions of the Bill: A is a settled ryot in respect of twelve beegahs of land in an estate in Zillah Moorshedabad. Part of the same estate is situated in the district of Burdwan. A's brother and co-sharer B goes there and takes into cultivation (even by squatting apparently would be sufficient), twelve beegahs of land. A and B at once become settled ryots in respect of this latter twelve beegahs; surely this is a reductio ad absurdum. I do not think it will be a hardship on a ryot to be compelled to prove his occupancy right in each village in which he holds lands, and certainly any other rule is a hardship on the zemindar.

In many districts there are a species of middlemen, who have been held by the High Court to be ryots. We will instance the jote munduls, amadars and ijaradars of Chyebassa and parts of the Midnapore and Bancoorah districts. Originally these tenures were jungle-boory. A man got a lease for a certain quantity of land, and was given carte blanche to take into cultivation as much waste land as he could, on condition of the excess being measured and assessed from time to time. The original lease-holder would of course sublet to a number of other tenants, and thus bring the jungle under cultivation. He may perhaps cultivate only twenty beegahs himself, out of a total area of 500 beegahs. The sub-tenants hand their lands down to their heirs, and the cultivators at the present day are nothing less than settled ryots of perhaps a century's standing, and yet the High Court have held that the original lease-holder is the occupancy ryot, and that the tenants under him are sub-ryots, who can never acquire a right of occupancy. Owing to the uncertain definition of 'tenure-holder,' it appears doubtful whether the Bill remedies this very unsatisfactory state of things. So far as I can make out, the Bill still leaves the matter in uncertainty. Sec. 3 (5) partially defines a ryot by enacting that a person shall not be deemed to be a ryot in respect of any land, or to hold that land as a ryot, unless he holds it for the purpose of agriculture, horticulture, or pasture, or he or his predecessor in interest came into possession of it for such purpose. Moreover, a ryot may sublet. By what means are we then to ascertain whether the jote munduls above referred to are ryots or tenure-holders? Are the holders of guzashta tenures in Shahabad to be regarded as ryots or tenure-holders? If the former, no right of occupancy can accrue under them, and yet a right of occupancy may accrue under a petty lakhirajdar, who perhaps owns only a few beegahs.

An occupancy ryot should be liable to ejectment, as at present, for arrears of rent due at the end of the year. The Bill appears to have made an alteration in this respect.

As to the transferability of the right of occupancy, the Statement of Objects and Reasons says that the right of pre-emption given to the zemindar will prevent an objectionable tenant being forced on him against his will. But what does this right of pre-emption avail the zemindar? Simply nothing. He merely buys a bag of wind. For he must sublet the land in nine cases out of ten, and immediately he sublets it, the tenant acquires a right of occupancy in it. The land remains raiyati land, and any contract to the contrary is expressly forbidden. Moreover, the new tenant will virtually hold at the old money rent, for Sec. 56 enacts that the rent is to be fixed in accordance with the provisions of the Act, and the existing rent is presumed to be fair and equitable, until enhanced under the Act. The landlord is not only prevented from settling the land as he pleases, but he will not even be able to get a substantial bonus or salami from the new tenant. It will be his interest to get a tenant as quickly as possible, rather than let the land remain waste, and this fact will be well known to his tenants. It will cost the tenants nothing to wait a year or so, while the landlord suffers a dead loss from the land remaining unlet. Thus it will be seen that the landlord has no possible object in buying up rights of occupancy. He pays the purchase money and absolutely gets no equivalent, for he will almost certainly be able to get no more rent from a new tenant than what was formerly paid. He may therefore allow the intending purchaser to purchase. His right of pre-emption is no right at all; it is worth nothing. It may be said that a landlord, who purchases an occupancy right, may keep the land in his own hands, and cultivate it by his servants or hired labourers. But how much can a landlord cultivate in this way? Obviously only a very limited quantity. The subject of subletting will be noticed further on.

There appears to be a consensus of opinion that the preparation of complete and reliable tables of rates will be an impossibility. The provisions in the Bill will perhaps render it easier to enhance the rent of occupancy ryots; and, having regard to the present deadlock in cases of enhancement, landlords have little cause to grumble at the proviso that a rent shall not be enhanced so as to be more than double the previous rent, that the enhancement may be made progressive, and that, when rent has been enhanced, it shall not be again enhanced for ten years. At present suits for enhancements are seldom or never decreed and landlords should welcome any change in the law which renders a fair enhancement possible.

The Bill allows an occupancy ryot to sue to have a grain rent commuted into a money-rent. Legislation of this sort is regrettable, and can only lead to mischievous results. A grain-rent should not be altered into a money-rent without the consent of the zemindar.

The rules about hasru land are not objectionable, and indicate an attempt to return to what has always been the common law of the country. Landlords really never thought of ejecting ryots from their houses, until Sir Richard Garth's extraordinary ruling in Shekh Rutton Beparry's case put the idea in their heads. That ruling has happily since been modified, and the Bill prevents any further misapprehension on the point.

The Bill provides that, if an ordinary ryot be ejected by a decree of court, the landlord must pay to the ryot such sum as the court may award as compensation for improvements, together with a further sum as compensation for disturbance equal to ten times the yearly increase of rent demanded by the landlord. The introduction of these elements is, in my deliberately of opinion, much to be regretted. Such ideas are alien to the rent law of Bengal, and their introduction will only cause needless and harassing litigation. It must be remembered how much easier it will be to prove occupancy rights under the Bill. Why should so much protection be extended to ordinary ryots? The privileges accorded to occupancy ryots sufficiently impoverish the zemindar; surely he should be allowed a little more liberty with regard to his ordinary tenantry. The Bill appears to take away at one fell swoop all the profits of the zemindars.

The introduction of the principle of compensation for improvements will not increase harmony between landlords and their tenants. The principle is foreign to the tenant-law of Bengal. Cases of ejectment of occupancy ryots will be very few and far between; their position is assured. As for ordinary raiyats, there is no reason why Government should legislate in their interests so as to injure the zemindars. They should of course have the right to erect a dwelling house; but the effect of allowing them to make other improvements will be that the landlord will be unable to eject them owing to the expense of doing so. A landlord thinks an ordinary ryot should pay, say, two annas extra in the rupee. If the ryot does not agree to the enhancement, the landlord must sue to eject him, and the decree for ejectment is conditional on his paying into court within fifteen days such sum as may be decreed payable as compensation for improvements, and also a further sum as compensation for disturbance, equal to ten times the yearly increase of rent demanded. Say the ryot's rent is Rs. 10. The landlord wants two annas extra in the rupee, or Rs. 11-4 in all. He must pay the ryot Rs. 12-8 as well as compensation for improvements. What in the world is the use to the landlord of any increase, if he must at once pay away a sum equal to such increase for the next ten years? So far as I can see, every ryot must become a settled ryot within a few years after the passing of the Bill.

The latter portion of the Bill is not open to so much objection as the former. The chapter relating to settlement of rents by a revenue officer may be found useful on occasions, and I do not think zemindars will have any reason to regret its provisions. But it is impossible to understand why the zemindars' powers of distraint should in any way have been lessened or curtailed. The original object of amending the rent-law was to give landlords a speedier and more effective means of realising their rents.

Paragraph 41 of the Reasons and Objects for the Bill is as follows:— "That the powers of transferring and subletting which the Bill recognises may in time lead to a state of things in which the great bulk of the actual cultivators would be not occupancy ryots, but under-ryots, with but little protection from the law, is indeed within the range of possibility." In Madras the sub-tenants of zemindars, inamdars, and Government ryots have no rights, and it is now proposed to amend Madras Act 8 of 1865, so as to give them certain rights and improve their status. A ryot who sublets all his land is likely to prove a very exacting landlord. The object of the Legislature is surely to protect the bona fide cultivator. It seems unwise to prevent altogether the accrual of any rights under a ryot. This is evident from the present anomalous state of the law in Madras (see judgments in Guruswami Sastri v. Andy, and Chockalinga Pillay v. Vythilingam Pundara Sundari). Lately the Madras High Court went so far as to eject a tenant of a zemindar in Nellore, who had been 73 years on his land, on the ground that Act 8 of 1865 confers no rights on under-tenants! In the face of such a ruling, so opposed to the custom and common law of the whole country, it might be advisable to insert in the Bengal Tenancy Bill some provisions to protect under-ryots.

The present Bengal Tenancy Bill is not only most favourable to the ryot, but it is so at the expense of the zemindars. The practical question is, whether the circumstances of the country justify such legislation. What have the collectors of districts said in answer to such question? In Eastern Bengal the ryots have the upper hand. In Central and Western Bengal they are at least able to hold their own. Combinations to withhold rent from a new putnidar are only too common. Where is the oppression committed by the zemindars? Now and again cases for taking some ryot to the cutcherry and wrongfully confining him are instituted, but at least as many of these cases are false as those that are true. I have not seen any literature which makes out a powerful case against the zemindars. If there are papers showing they have abused their powers, and indulged in wholesale oppression, the Government would do well to publish them. In districts where education has spread much, it is by no means an easy matter for a zemindar to commit oppression. To eject a tenant, or to take more rent than he is legally entitled to. The tenantry are well able to hold their own; they have had ever since 1859 privileges, some of which the Irish tenantry got only in 1870, and some of which they have not even got to this day. Then, again, any legislation that will lower the influence and status of the zemindars is most earnestly to be deprecated. That there may be one or two black sheep among them cannot be denied. But as a body they are a source of strength to the Government, and there are numbers of them of whom Bengal may well be proud. Has a sufficient case been made out for curtailing the rights of these men, for rendering them mere annuitants on estates of which they were formerly the real owners, masters, and managers? What is the opinion of the collectors of districts on the Bill? They can speak to the relations of landlords and tenants in their respective districts. Nothing but a general consensus among them as to the necessity for the Bill will justify the Legislature in passing it. The sanctity of the Permanent Settlement must be left beyond question, and for this reason more weight should be attached to the opinion of Lower Bengal than to those of North-West Officers. I believe the Collectors of the permanently-settled districts in the North-West Provinces are of opinion that the Bill is far too revolutionary, that many of the provisions in favour of the ryots are not required, while the vested interests of the zemindars are either ruthlessly curtailed or altogether swept away. The advocates of the Bill appear to forget entirely what was the position of ryots prior to 1859. It is quite irrelevant to discuss what ought to have been their position according to the spirit of the Permanent Settlement Regulations. As a matter of fact they enjoyed few or no rights, and their position, which had steadily been becoming worse, was rendered deplorable by the operations of the earlier sale laws, such as Act 1 of 1845. Numerous provisions had been inserted by the Legislature in Reg. 8 of 1793 "for the protection and welfare of the dependent talukdars, ryots, and other cultivators of the soil;" so that it is incorrect to say that the pledge was not redeemed till 1859. But after the Permanent Settlement had been in force a few years, it was found that all the ancient zemindari families were rapidly being sold up, and so we find that laws such as Reg. 5 of 1799 and Reg. 5 of 1812 were framed for the protection of the zemindars, and to aid them in the speedy realisation of their rents. Now all this, and very much more, was known to the framers of Act 10 of 1859. Legislative measures were not then published and publicly discussed in the same way and to the same extent as now; but it is a most gratuitous and presumptuous assumption to suppose that the Revenue and Judicial Officers of 1859 knew nothing of the Permanent Settlement literature, because they did not write and publish blue books to the weight of several maunds. Considering the undoubted position of the ryots prior to 1859, all honour must be given to those legislators who produced such a Magna Charta for the ryots as Act 10 of 1859 assuredly is. Surely, they were bold friends of the ryots who enacted Sec. 6 of that Act giving the occupancy right, who put new restrictions on enhancement, gave full opportunity of proving fixed rents, curtailed the power of distraint, took away from landlords the power of compelling the attendance of their tenants, and enacted many other provisions favourable to the ryots. The opinion of Sir Barnes Peacock and other eminent judicial officers, the outcry of the zemindars as to breach of faith, and indeed the time it has taken the ordinary tenantry to recognise the existence of a twelve years' rule in their favour,—all this and more besides shows that Sec. 6 was practically an innovation, though perhaps not historically and theoretically so. Lapse of time is no unimportant factor in the consideration of such questions; vested interests are sold and purchased, and each year that passes increases the sense of security. Even Government is barred by limitation in the courts; and there is no valid reason why lapse of time should not be taken into consideration when vested interests are interfered with by legislation. When rights and privileges long enjoyed are taken away, compensation must be given. Why, compensation was even given to the slave owners, whose enjoyment of rights can scarcely have been deemed a lawful enjoyment. The present Bengal Tenancy Bill is not required; it is a revolutionary measure; it robs the zemindars of rights, privileges, and status, which they have enjoyed for at least a century, and of which no officer who knows the country ever suggested they should be deprived; it makes the position of a settled ryot more important and valuable than that of a zemindar, and generally it confers on cultivators rights which they never asked for, and some of which they never even heard of. The Bill is a shock to security, subversive of the rights of property, and a deathblow to the zemindars. All that was required was a slight tinkering of Act 10. The occupancy right requires to be placed on a surer and firmer basis, zemindars should be compelled to grant pottas and full receipts, and to keep proper accounts in bound ledgers; and on the other hand some workable means of enhancing rent should be devised, and provision made for the more speedy realisation of rent. This was all that was required, and all that was ever recommended by experienced revenue officers.

I have ever been a friend of the ryots and an advocate of the welfare of the bona fide cultivator of the soil. But no one who knows the country, and has any regard for its peace and welfare, can contemplate without grave anxiety the possibility of the present Bill being passed into law. But festina lente be the motto of the Legislative Council as they discuss this Bill: let each chapter and clause be thrashed out by the light of facts and experience. If this be done, I venture to think the Bill may pass in a very much more modified form. I do not mean to say that the Bill should be shelved altogether; I am an advocate of the changes above indicated and they are more especially needed for the Province of Behar, in portions of which the condition of the ryot is, and always has been, depressed, owing to special causes. Revision is required, and no good can be gained by putting off the day of revision. The reports on the various Bills contain all the information and data required. But it is to be hoped there will be no attempt to hurry the Bill through Council. It should be remembered that Buonaparte had at his command the services of experienced jurists for years; yet his legislation was very slow. The French Criminal Codes were actually put in hand in 1801; and yet the Procedure Code was not completed till 1808, and the Penal Code not till 1810. The words of Macaulay as regards the Indian Penal Code should be borne in mind. He was called on to explain his procrastination, and after enumerating special reasons for delay, he adds: "I must say that, even if no allowance be made for the untoward occurrences which have retarded our progress, that progress cannot be called slow. People who have never considered the importance and difficulty of the task in which we are employed are surprised to find that a Code cannot be spoken off extempore, or written like an article in a Magazine. I am not ashamed to acknowledge that there are several chapters in the Code on which I have been employed for months; of which I have changed the whole plan ten or twelve times; which contain not a single word as it originally stood; and with which I am still very far indeed from being satisfied. I certainly shall not hurry on my share of the work to gratify the childish impatience of the ignorant. Their censure ought to be a matter of perfect indifference to men engaged in a task, on the right performance of which the welfare of millions may, during a long series of years, depend. The cost of the Commission is as nothing when compared with the importance of such a work. The time during which the Commission has sat is as nothing compared with the time during which that work will produce good, or evil, to India." Act 10 of 1859 has stood the test of time very well, and it now requires but a very little more tinkering than the venerable Penal Code itself. It is to be hoped the Legislative Council will follow the example of nature, according to which "nihil fit per saltum."

I might with more justice and reason sign myself "pro-ryot" than "pro-zemindar." But I prefer not to take sides, and therefore sign myself,

INDIAN RAILWAY POLICY.

At a meeting of the East India Association, held at Exeter Hall on Nov. 29, Mr. Edmund Kimber read a paper on "The Indian Railway Policy. Lieut. General W. Warden Anderson presided, and among those present were Colonel P. T. French, chairman of the Bombay and Baroda Railway, Mr. Fung Yee Secretary of the Chinese Legation, Captain Molesworth, R.N., Captain Bedford Pim, Colonel Evans, Mr. J. M. Maclean, Mr. Campbell, and a number of officers and gentlemen interested in Indian railways. Mr. Kimber said it was clear upon referring to a report for 1882-3, bearing Colonel Stanton's name, which had been presented to Parliament, that both Colonel Stanton and Major Baring had acquiesced in a certain policy which they thought the Imperial Government ought to carry out. What that policy was they did not tell the public, and though Lord Kimberley and the Council of State must have been in possession of it for many months, they did not condescend to inform the British public what it was. What could those recommendations be? It would not be surprising to find that they were such as would promote the construction of railways on strictly business principles without any of those paternal intermeddlings which were so often the vices of all despotic Governments. Once put the native princes and the British capitalists face to face without tedious routine, red-tape delay and regulations, and railway business would flow on as easily as it did in the United States. Secrecy in a great question like that was the very worst method of government. He was afraid, however, that under the present Administration progress could not even be hoped for. In the year 1880-81 838 miles were constructed, in 1881-82 only 726, and in 1882-83 only 373. They had no less a mileage than 5,262 positively recommended to be constructed by the Public Works Department in India, and practically no policy whatever as to how it was to be done. The British public were ready to invest even £50,000,000 a year if they had a chance, but this was denied them. Routine and red tape were at the bottom of it. It was simply absurd to spend £2,500,000 a year out of income when that very amount of income could be made subservient to getting £50,000,000. Far better would it be to lay down a regular Lands Clauses Consolidation Act and a Railway Clauses Act for India and establish a regular tribunal before which every application for a railway project could be made just as they were made in this country to the Houses of Parliament. An Englishman would let his money go into any country or any enterprise so long as he thought it was safe and would yield a good return, and, unless the Imperial Government of India could shake off its despotism and submit itself to the wisdom of the ordinary tradesman, it would wither like grass. It was that policy which drove capital from the country and enabled Americans to complete against Englishmen for Indian schemes. Already the whole of the stock of the Bombay Tramways was held at New York, and powerful American financiers were the first applicants for Indian railways. So utterly disgusted had many men become that they believed the country would prosper better even under Russian rule. Unfortunately, the Americans also felt the incubus of the intolerable officialism exercised over railways, and though they were willing to work amicably and heartily with both native and European, they found themselves fettered with a policy springing from an authority which did not know its own mind. A discussion followed, in which Messrs. Fung Yee, Martin Wood, J. M. Maclean, A. K. Connell, and Captain Molesworth took part.

TEA IN CEYLON.

INDIAN Tea owners have so much to do in looking after their own affairs in this country, that it is hardly to be wondered at if they have paid less attention than was perhaps desirable to what is going on in Ceylon; and yet the advent and progress there in tea cultivation may become a matter of considerable moment to us in India.

Some years ago we drew attention to the efforts that were being made to extend tea cultivation in the Island, and to the advantages which Ceylon possessed by reason of its greater nearness to the home market, and its immunity from the heavy transit charges which press so heavily on Tea Estates in India before their produce can even be landed in Calcutta; but we argued that the quality of Indian tea, and the experience which, after so many years, had been gained in cultivation and manufacture, would, despite the drawback against us before mentioned, still leave us masters of the situation. Results, since, hardly seem to bear out this conclusion; for teas of desirable quality are now being grown in the island; and great attention to excellence of manufacture is being shown is proved by the fact that Ceylon teas are fetching all round as good, even if not better, prices than our own teas, perhaps Darjeelings excepted. Whether this has resulted from the employment of skilled Indian planters, from the suitability of the soil, or from the advantage that the different elevations the island affords for suitable sites, from a warm moist climate to a bracing hill atmosphere, is of little importance beside the fact that Ceylon is becoming, and apparently stands still further to become, a powerful rival; and it is well that we should recognise this in good time.

The disasters which for some years past have affected coffee, have naturally led to attention being directed to tea, and now that what may almost be called mere experimental efforts have proved so extraordinarily successful, it may be expected that tea culture in the island will expand to an extent we never dreamt of; and there is no doubt that we shall have to look to our laurels.

The drawbacks of the various forms of blight which almost all estates in India more or less suffer from, appears to be absent at present in Ceylon—although, presumably, this state of things may not last; and tea may become there the victim to some pest, in like manner as coffee has been, and is; but the evil has not happened to any appreciable extent yet, and Ceylon tea prospects, it cannot be denied, look highly promising. Labour is plentiful, and comparatively cheap, for the bonus system has not yet become an institution, and it does not cost, as with us, Rs.80 or 100 to land an agreement labourer on an estate. Yield, too, appears to compare very favourably with some of the best of our gardens, although we think 700 or 800 lbs. an acre must be taken to represent the exception rather than the rule. Still, with a low cost of production, and cheap transit, a much smaller yield than this should pay well, for a recent London sale of Ceylon tea averaged, on 3,000 packages, 1s. 5½d. all round. There is of course the high price of seed to be taken into account in estimating profits, but it appears that a very large nursery for tea seed has been laid down to meet future requirements, so that in a few years we may expect to see Ceylon supplying its own tea seed, and becoming in this respect independent of India.

The almost surprising success which has so far attended tea cultivation in Ceylon, causes one to wonder how it has happened that it was not earlier attempted, but perhaps, except for the advent of the hemilea vastatrix, coffee might still have remained king.—Indian Tea Gazette.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

Colonel Francis Duncan, R.A., addressed a large meeting of his supporters on Wednesday, Nov. 28, at South House, Stoke Newington; Mr. Dixon-Hartland, M.P., in the chair. In referring to his own return from Egypt, Colonel Duncan described at some length the present position of affairs in that country, which he considered to be of a very serious character; but he deprecated the idea of tracing the action of the Mahdi to the English occupation. He said he was not at all afraid to accept the challenge made by Lord Hartington to the Conservative Party at large, for wherever he turned his eyes he saw confusion and irritation created by the action of the present Government. Ireland was unpacified, Australia was irritated, South Africa was confused, and in Europe there was not a single nation who supported our Foreign Policy, because the present Government had no Policy sufficiently definite to be supported. Addresses were subsequently delivered by Mr. Dixon-Hartland and others, in which special attention was called to the policy of the present Government in India. It was urged that the two worst principles of Radical Government were brilliantly illustrated by the two Ilbert Bills—namely, unnecessary interference with old-established rights and unjustified interference with property without compensation. By the Ilbert Bill proper it was intended to extend the jurisdiction of the native judges, but the real effect was to deprive all Englishmen in India of their right to choose their judges, a right well established and not complained of, and analogous to the right here of every prisoner to challenge any jurymen he objects to. By the Bengal Rent Bill, the principles of the Irish Land Act, which were admittedly adapted to remedy a special disease, were to be applied to totally dissimilar circumstances with new and more stringent provisions. It was based upon the very simple principle, or want of principle, that if you wish to gain popularity you are justified in taking the easy course of taking property from those who have, and giving it to those who have not. The effect of such a bill must not only be to inflict the greatest injustice upon a particular class, but to teach the people that worst of lessons that reforms entail no responsibility and need not be paid for except out of the pockets of the persons reformed. A vote of confidence was unanimously passed in Colonel Duncan. The proceedings were of a very enthusiastic character and did not terminate until a late hour.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette, Nov. 16.)

His Excellency the Commander in Chief General Hardinge, arrived in Bombay from Mallegaum by the mail train at 9 a.m. on Nov. 14.

Lieutenant Colonel A. Battye, Commanding 2nd (Prince of Wales's Own) Ghoorkas, intends proceeding to England on furlough next month, and will probably leave the regiment about the 10th proximo.

Lieutenant Colonel Percy Bellamy, who for five years was Brigade Major at Cawnpore, succeeds to the command of the 2nd Battalion the Border Regiment, (the old 55th), in succession to Lieutenant Colonel W. H. Rowland, who reached, the prescribed age of fifty-five years on the 20th of last month, having only held the command for two and a quarter years.

Lieutenant Colonel H. Langtry will succeed to the command of the 8th King's Royal Irish Hussars on the 14th instant; consequently his exchange, last June twelve months, with Lieutenant Colonel Field, from the 15th Hussars, has been a lucky one. Lieutenant Colonel Chaplin, who is now on leave in England till the 14th instant, the date of his completing four years in command, will not rejoin, accepting the four years' rule in place of the old five-year one, under which he was appointed.

Major W. S. Sinkins, 2nd Liverpool, retires from the service; Major A. D. Anderson, R.A., is transferred from Allahabad to Bangalore to join I Battery 3rd Brigade; Captain Wright, 1st East Lancashire, officiates as deputy assistant adjutant general for musketry, 3rd Circle, vice Baines, resigned. Lieutenant Colonel Blake, 6th Dragoon Guards, proceeds home on twelve months' leave. Captain A. E. C. Kaye, Leinster Regiment, resigns his probationary appointment in the Madras Staff Corps, and is attached to the 2nd Somersetshire Light Infantry, pending orders from the Horse Guards.

Major Campbell, 1st York and Lancaster, has been granted an extension of leave in England until the 27th December next.

Major G. E. Erskine, Bombay Cavalry, is promoted to lieutenant colonel on completion of twenty-six years service.

Captain B. G. Humphrey, Bombay Staff Corps, is promoted to major on completing twenty years' service, six of which have been in the Staff Corps.

Captains Elverson and Hughes, Royal West Surrey Regiment, exchange into 1st and 2nd Battalions respectively; the latter will do duty at the depot.

Captain E. L. B. Thackwell, 2nd Battalion Royal Fusiliers, doing duty at Wellington depot, has been directed to rejoin the battalion at Bellary.

Captain Webb, adjutant, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, proceeds to Allahabad, for examination as to his fitness for promotion to major.

Captain Michael Fenton, of the Army Pay Department, at present attached to the 1st Battalion South Lancashire Regiment at Peshawur, has been ordered to proceed to England this trooping season. An exchange, however, has been arranged by him with Captain A. Brett, Paymaster to the 1st Durham Light Infantry at Allahabad, which, if sanctioned by the home authorities, will allow Captain Fenton to remain in India till about the season of 1885-86, and so in all probability go home with the battalion he has been attached to since joining the department.

Lieutenant Hall, Royal Warwickshire Regiment, is removed to the 2nd Battalion, and Lieutenant Cockburn's recent transfer to the same battalion is cancelled.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE "TIMES" ON THE CASE OF MR. TAYLER, LATE COMMISSIONER OF PATNA.

In the course of an appreciative notice of Mr. Holmes's very valuable "History of the Indian Mutiny," just published by Messrs. W. H. Allen and Co., the Times draws prominent attention to the flood of new light that is thrown by that work on the scandalous ingratitude of the Government to Mr. Commissioner Tayler, the saviour of Patna. The story is well known to most of our readers. There is hardly an Indian journal that has not, at one time or another, during the last four-and-twenty years, protested against the misuse of the despotic power of the Government of India that has resulted in such shameful injustice; and we fear that there are few Indian readers who have not at last grown hardened to a tale of wrong that must at first have seemed incredible to each one of them. It is, therefore, with great pleasure that we observe that Mr. Holmes's able work has induced the Times to take up the case; for under the fierce light of the criticism of the Times it is seldom possible for a glaring injustice long to survive. This is what the Times says :—

"Mr. Holmes describes once more the succession of difficulties which Mr. Tayler overcame in the great city of Patna without the aid of a single English soldier. Not only did that gentleman detect at an early stage of the outbreak the ramifications which the disaffected had established within his own jurisdiction, but he devised a plan, simple in itself, and the only one that was feasible with the limited means at his disposal, for crushing those who were meditating a revolt. Patna was the centre of the Wahabis in Bengal. The fanaticism of these ultra-Mahomedans would have added a new and very grave peril to the situation. Mr. Tayler resolved to prevent the execution of their schemes. He invited the three chief Moulvies of the Patna Wahabis to his residence, and he forthwith placed them under arrest. The plot of the Patna rebels was thus promptly foiled, and treason dared not to declare itself for fear of the lives in the power of the English Commissioner. The exploit was conspicuous, but its full value was not revealed until some time after the Mutiny had been crushed, when in 1865 one of these very Moulvies, the notorious Ahmed Oollah, was brought up on a fresh charge of treason, found guilty, and transported to the Andamans. There cannot be two opinions on the question that Mr.

Tayler had performed an inestimable service in the interests of his country; but at the present time this ex-Commissioner of Patna remains without the smallest recognition of the very noble work he did there in the darkest days of 1857, when, moreover, an example of fortitude was so much needed. The injustice to Mr. Tayler was not confined to his being overlooked. Whether from motives of personal feeling, or from a sense of injured official etiquette at his not having first reported the affair to, and obtained the consent of, his superior, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, Mr. Tayler was removed from the Patna which he had saved from outrage and mutiny. Smarting under the sense of this injustice, Mr. Tayler resigned the service, and he has now been seeking for twenty years that redress which he believes the justice of his countrymen will not in the end deny."

It is now nearly a quarter of a century that this has been going on. In such a case, it seems a monstrous addition to the original injustice to say that lapse of time has barred Mr. Tayler's claims to redress. It is, of course, too late now to reinstate Mr. Tayler in the Service, or otherwise to make full amends for the injury that was done him so many years ago. But even the tardy bestowal of the honour that was so well earned in the Mutiny, is far better than no recognition at all. The Times well observes :—

"History has recognised his claim to be regarded as having saved Patna during the Mutiny; yet no step has been taken, to offer the easy redress which would be a solace to a distinguished public servant in his old age, and which would redeem the Indian Administration from the charge of ingratitude."

NOTES ON THE OFFICE OF A MAGISTRATE IN BENGAL.

(1.) Magistrates in England are (a) honorary, (b) stipendiary.

(2.) Honorary magistrates are the usual and normal means of administering justice. They are men of character of a town or county, and have their jurisdiction and power for the town or the county only.

(3.) They are the recognised heads of local society, men of character and position; not necessarily, indeed very seldom, trained lawyers.

(4.) An honorary magistrate of a town has no jurisdiction outside the square mile or two within the borough boundaries. Neither can he carry his powers with him to another place. They are strictly local, and are based on (a) his local familiarity with the people, (b) the respect of the people of the place for him.

(5.) Stipendiary magistrates are appointed solely for judicial work. They are connected neither with the Government nor with any local institution.

(6.) They are appointed only in towns, with a limited jurisdiction. The stipendiary belongs to the town, and cannot be removed to another place. He cannot exercise powers in another place by virtue of his past experience elsewhere.

(7.) He is the deputy of the local honorary magistrates, and is appointed only where the duties are too heavy for any man to undertake, unless they are his sole business. Every precaution is taken to assimilate his experience to that of old inhabitants. He is fixed in the place; he is to know the people and the people are to know him.

(8.) The honesty and integrity of the magistrates are taken for granted. The next most important qualification, viz., intimate familiarity with the people, their language, manners, and customs, is what is chiefly sought after in the magistrates. The last and least important qualification is legal knowledge, which is valued comparatively little.

IN INDIA.

(1.) Magistrates are (a) honorary, and (b) stipendiary.

(2.) Honorary magistrates are important local men. They are generally (except for the enforcement of purely local laws) appointed for the work of some particular bench.

(3.) They have not power to entertain complaints, or to issue warrant or summons. Their sole duty as honorary magistrates is to sit on the bench to which they belong, and here only under the presidency of a paid government official.

(4.) The Government has always been anxious to trust them and make use of their services more extensively. The vast population of Bengal requires numerous courts of justice to enforce the law without hardship and with efficiency. The poverty of the country forbids the multiplication of paid officials.

(5.) The honorary magistrates are willing to undertake the duties of courts after the manner of English justices. In fact many of them do now habitually hold unauthorised courts, and decide local disputes. But for this, our administration of the criminal law would break down.

(6.) But the people over whom such jurisdiction would be given abhor the notion. They have no faith in the honesty and impartiality of the honorary magistrates, and fear that power, if given, would be used only to serve friends and harass enemies. Thus their local knowledge and familiarity with the people are not enough to give them, whatever their rank, the confidence of the people.

(7.) The title of honorary magistrate is therefore as yet but an empty compliment. The Government cannot in the face of the earnest opposition of the people, vest their chiefs with a power which is its own, and for whose use it will be praised or blamed. Though the possession of this power would be prized, though its refusal is a most decided slur on the character of all the people, and especially of their chiefs, the power of issuing summons or warrant is withheld from all in the whole of Bengal, and of sitting alone to try cases from almost all.

(8.) Stipendiary magistrates are called so only in the sense that they do magistrates' work and receive pay. They are, more properly speaking, servants of Government vested with judicial powers.

(9.) Their position as magistrates owes its existence to the fact that honorary magistrates are not trusted. Neither personally, nor by their deputies can the honorary magistrates do any of the magistrates' work which is done in England by the corresponding class. Thus the whole magisterial staff in England, honorary and stipendiary, have nothing to correspond with them in Bengal. It is an instrument of justice wanting.

(10.) The Government has accordingly had to take upon itself the whole task of organising a magisterial staff, which is composed only of its own servants.

(11.) When work is entrusted to servants, supervision is necessary. The leading principle in the organisation of the Government's magisterial staff is therefore discipline. Thus honesty and impartiality which are taken for granted in England have, in Bengal, to be secured by precautions.

(12.) The main precaution is one which involves a sacrifice of that which is prized so much in England, viz., localisation and familiarity with the people of the place. It is that the officials are under a central control, cut off from all local connection, and frequently moved about, hundreds of miles sometimes, at uncertain intervals.

(13.) The officials who do magisterial duties have all the ordinary duties of Government to do, such as revenue, excise, treasuries, stamps, gaols, police, and other works. They are not appointed merely or chiefly for judicial work.

(14.) They are grouped together in districts of from a million to two million inhabitants, and all the officials with magisterial powers in the district are under a commanding officer, called the magistrate of the district. He is the local controller of the whole Government business in his district, not merely criminal. Only he or selected officers can receive complaints or issue process. He decides which subordinates shall try which cases. In fact, his subordinates are under strict discipline, which he wields.

(15.) The appeal from a magistrate's decision lies to him if the magistrate has small powers, or to the sessions judge if greater.

(16.) So important does discipline appear to be over legal knowledge, that the whole staff of officials who are specially recruited for the judicial service and that only—viz., the moonsifs and subordinate judges, who outnumber the criminal judicial officers, are absolutely excluded from the exercise of criminal jurisdiction in the smallest case. The want of their help in the disposal of criminal cases causes much inconvenience both to the people and to the Government, and even failure of justice

(17.) The only reasonable explanation to be offered is that, as purely judicial officers, they are more independent of the executive, and therefore cannot be brought sufficiently under discipline.

(18.) While a great proportion of the officials exercising magisterial powers are natives, the supervising district officers have hitherto been all Europeans. The experiment of putting natives in that position has yet to be tried.

(19.) Thus it appears that it is not the native magistrate so much as the discipline that has been trusted, and the supervising agency has been European. The discipline has been, and is, deemed essential. Discipline and local familiarity being inconsistent, the latter has been sacrificed, and with it efficiency.

SESSIONS COURTS.—IN ENGLAND.

(1.) For the trial of important criminal cases, the two qualities of local experience and legal knowledge are required in a great degree.

(2.) The combination of these in one person being unusual, they are disjoined, and the former is supplied by the jury, the latter by the judge.

(3.) The first place in dignity is given to the jury. It is they who are sworn "well and truly to try between our Sovereign Lady the Queen and the prisoner at the bar." They are to bring in a verdict.

(4.) The office of the judge is to see that the proper materials for judgment, and they only go before the jury. He is also to inform them on points of law, and to tell them whether the lawyers at the bar have stated it correctly or no.

(5.) The judge, having been trained at the bar, and being posted in the metropolis, has great opportunities of knowing human nature generally, greater than any of the jurymen. This, however, is not considered to make up for that intimate knowledge of local human nature which the jury are presumed to have.

(6.) The jury are sifted of all men objected to by either the Crown on the one part or the prisoner on the other. Local knowledge and familiarity are thus rid of that which is most likely to taint them—viz., prejudice.

(7.) The judge is brought to the jury, not the jury to the judge.

(8.) The judge, as possessing to a peculiar degree knowledge of law and procedure, is at the service of the whole country and goes on circuit, returning after each circuit to the metropolis. He has thus an ever widening experience, and also the full benefit of the experience of others.

IN INDIA.

(1.) The same qualities that are wanted for the trial in England of important criminal cases are wanted in India.

(2.) The combination of these in one person is no more novel in India than in England, but there is so much risk in trusting mere local experience that it stands in a much less trusted position in India, and the qualifications are not so usually disjoined.

(3.) Thus the judge in India does not usually go on circuit, but he remains in a single district. Local experience is therefore gathered up to a certain degree in him, though that degree is much inferior to that which can be attained in England under the jury system.

(4.) In some districts there is no jury, but only two assessors, who can find no verdict, but only advise the judge in the finding of it. In some there is a jury, but the jury is brought to the judge, and not the judge to the jury. The local experience of the jury is not greatly superior to that of the judge.

(5.) Where there is a jury, its verdict is not treated with such respect as that of an English jury, but may be reversed by the High Court. Thus a Hindoo jury acquitted a Bramin youth of a charge of murder, it was believed, because he was a Bramin, and the High Court quashed the verdict, convicted the accused, and sentenced him to death. He was executed.

(6.) It thus appears that while the Government are willing to go as far as they dare towards taking local experience in as an ally in administering justice, here, as in the case of honorary magistrates, the risk is too great to go for.

(7.) The judge has not had the same opportunity of acquiring a knowledge of human nature as the judge in England. He has not been trained at the bar; he does not stay in the metropolis, so as to have familiar acquaintance with the pure principles of law, and mix much in general society; he does not go on circuit; and he has only the local bar. So that, whether in point of legal knowledge or of experience in human nature, he has less opportunity of excelling in general ability.

(8.) At the same time, he has special experience of the people among whom his work lies, which renders him in this more efficient in his sphere than he would be with the training of an English judge. The English judge does not need this which is supplied by the jury. He does need it, and has it more or less.

(9.) Of the jury and assessors it may be said that their local experience is not so great as that of an English jury, because they are drawn from a larger area, communication is not so easy, and society is much more varied and divided; and that there is not the same confidence reposed in them.

(10.) Of the judge it may be said that, in general experience and knowledge, he is inferior to the judge in England. He is entrusted with greater powers, simply because they must be given to some one, and there is no one else available. In local experience he is much inferior to the jury in England, but superior to the judge, and it is not his legal knowledge or training, but his experience of the people that enables him to discharge with more or less credit, the very serious functions that are laid upon him.

(11.) It may be noticed that the sessions judges in Bengal have hitherto been all Europeans. No native has, it is believed, ever yet held a sessions. It remains to be seen therefore how natives will do in the office, and they are yet to be tried. The only native sessions judge in India is a foreigner in the province where he is posted, and his family are or were kept in England.

CONCLUSION.

(1.) The whole system of criminal jurisdiction in Bengal is based on the fact that the people object to one another. The work of criminal cases has been thrown on the Government because there is no one else to do it.

(2.) It is a positive drawback to the efficiency of criminal justice, which is between "our Sovereign Lady the Queen and the prisoner at the bar," that the judges between the parties should be exclusively servants of one party, and as such servants kept under strict central discipline.

(3.) The European community have accepted, for the sake of practical convenience, a numerous class of these servants, in spite of the drawback, which must be prejudicial to the defence. They trust not the Government—not the discipline—but the men.

(4.) The European community have also put forward no such objections to their own members not in Government employ, such as are found among natives to natives, and the Government has no reason to distrust such person.

(5.) Hitherto, accordingly, criminal jurisdiction has been given over members of the European community to all respectable members of that community who are not in European employ, and even to those who are in it, though virtually under the control of the prosecution. Thus the European community have gone a great deal further than that at home, or in the colonies, in trusting the Government, and have followed the universal rule of British communities in trusting the respectable men among themselves with jurisdiction. In British communities the exercise of this is looked upon not as a Government, but as a public duty.

(6.) The Government in their recent Bill—the Ilbert Bill—have been led away into an utterly false conclusion by a misunderstanding of the facts. European British officials who have received the confidence of the European British community have been trusted not as officials, but as European British subjects. Their official position was a drawback, not a recommendation. To infer therefore from the fact of an official being trusted that he is trusted because he is an official is an utterly false reasoning.

(7.) The British community look on the office and discipline as no more than uniform and drill. They no more trust a Bengali because he is an official than they would trust a Bengali dressed in Highland uniform and drilled in a Highland regiment, because of such uniform and drill, to lead a forlorn hope.

THE ILBERT BILL.

THE OLDHAM MEETING TO PROTEST AGAINST THE ILBERT BILL.

A public meeting under the auspices of the Oldham Conservative Working Men's League was held in the Oldham Town Hall on Saturday night, to hear addresses on the Ilbert Bill, by Mr. F. T. Atkins, delegate of the working men of India, and Colonel Malleon, C.S.I. Mr. J. M. Maclean, one of the Conservative candidates for Oldham, presided. There was a large attendance. On the crowded platform were Colonel Malleon, Mr. Atkins, Mr. J. Wild, Mr. G. B. Neild, Mr. S. Taylor, Mr. Smythe, Mr. Waddington, Captain Crompton, Mr. J. H. Bottomley, Mr. J. S. Tetlow, Mr. Dawson, Mr. W. Senior, and others.

The CHAIRMAN, who was received with great cheering, said that although that was not a political meeting he could not help congratulating them on an event which he had no doubt was uppermost in their minds, viz., the municipal victory which the Conservatives had won that week in Oldham. (Cheers.) That was a victory which they had just cause to rejoice over, not only because it had placed Mr. S. Taylor in the town council for Werneth Ward, but because it also showed what progress Conservatism had made in the borough. (Cheers.) Since he had become practically connected with Oldham no more cheering incident had occurred to him personally, and none more full of hope for the future than that success. (Cheers.) Mr. Taylor had set them all a very good example, which he hoped would not be thrown away. (Laughter and cheers.) Turning to the matter which had brought them together, he need scarcely tell them that the Oldham Conservative Working Men's League had called the meeting in order that they might hear addresses on the Ilbert Bill by gentlemen who would speak to them not as partisans, but as Anglo-Indians. He thought he might claim for himself from his long experience of India some justification in addressing them on Indian affairs. He was familiar with the sentiments of Anglo-Indians, and he knew how much they were interested in this Ilbert Bill. Colonel Malleon had distinguished himself as a soldier and as an administrator, but his name must be still more familiar to them as a brilliant man of letters, whose historical writings on the most important periods of English conquest in India had done so much to redeem that class of literature from the reproach of Lord Macaulay, that they were unable to make it interesting. Mr. Atkins had been sent out by the Anglo-Indians to tell the working-men of England what injustice this Bill would do to them in that country, if passed into law. Through party feeling which had been brought into play on the other side, Mr. Atkins had not received that cordial welcome and fair play to which he was fairly entitled. He hoped the Conservative working-men of Oldham would show that they were ready to listen to him. (Hear, hear.) To show them how earnest were the English working-men of India on this question, many of them had subscribed several days' pay towards the payment of his expenses, in order that he might tell the people of England what their sentiments were with regard to this Bill. (Cheers.) Any remarks he (the chairman) had to make on the question at that meeting could not be better prefaced than by taking as his text a portion of the speech of the Hon. E. L. Stanley at Springhead. (Laughter.) Mr. Stanley was one of the Liberal members for Oldham, and he seemed at this latter late period to have thought it desirable to make some remarks about this Bill. (Laughter.) Mr. Stanley had thrown out a direct challenge to him in order that he might make a reply on this question, from which it was apparent that Mr. Stanley had not done him the honour of reading the speeches he had delivered in that town for some time past—(laughter)—for he had spoken at some length on the subject; but as he was always ready to oblige Mr. Stanley—"Give it him hot"—he would now refer to that gentleman's speech of last week. Mr. Stanley was reported to have said "that the objection to the Ilbert Bill was one of the most absurd things and one of the worst appeals to race pride and arrogance that he had heard of." Did they not think there might be a little arrogance on the other side? Mr. Stanley, who seemed to know absolutely nothing about the matter, had come forward and declared that the opposition to the Bill, and opposition which included the official and non-official classes of India, was one of the most absurd things he had heard of. Why, the persons who objected to this Bill were the men who held the Empire of India for them—men who had governed it with wisdom for a long period. If the opinions of such were to be set aside who was to govern that country? (Cheers.) How strong was the opinion of Mr. Stanley, compared with that put forward by a Liberal statesman of the highest rank—Lord Northbrook? Speaking on this subject at Bristol, Lord Northbrook did not say the opposition to the Bill was one of the most absurd things he had heard of, but he paid a tribute of respect to the worth of men who had opposed this Bill. He said he knew how much the State owed them for their services, and that the Government was willing to meet them in their objections, and make some modifications to meet their wishes. (Cheers.) He (Mr. Maclean) and other opponents of the Bill might have an opinion about those concessions, as to whether they went far enough. Still the speech of Lord Northbrook was the speech of a statesman. Lord Northbrook had not thought it his duty to come before any Liberal audience and denounce the opponents of the measure for their "arrogance" and "absurdity." (Cheers and laughter.) That was reserved for men like Mr. Stanley. He could guess where Mr. Stanley got his cue from. In one of those speeches which Mr. Gladstone was far too fond of making in Parliament, he said his aim was to check the spirit of English ascendancy in India. Mr. Gladstone, in making such a statement, was only faithful to his early traditions. Forty years ago, when he called himself one of the Tory party, Mr. Gladstone, in a book which he wrote on "Church and State," said we did not rule India as conquerors, but by treaty with its princes. Lord Macaulay who wrote a review of the book, administered a most severe rebuke to its author. It was by force, and not by stipulation, that England governed India. English ascendancy was written in every line of the administration of India. It was the very basis of our empire there. (Hear, hear.) All the high administrative posts were filled by Englishmen. Not only that, but the whole military force was commanded by Englishmen. Every regiment in the army in India was commanded by British officers. Through every department the principle was maintained that English ascendancy was necessary to uphold that country. Sir E. Baring, one of the principal supporters of the Ilbert Bill, and a man of great experience, in writing on the subject in the Fortnightly Review, did not say that race differences should be utterly swept away and nothing more heard of them; he said it must be many generations before English ascendancy could be done away with and that it would be a most dangerous thing if it were at present considerably lessened. That showed how absurd it was for Mr. Stanley to come there and denounce in broad terms the opponents of a Bill which was discussed in a very different spirit by everybody who knew India. (Hear, hear.) Mr. Stanley next fell back upon the Queen's Proclamation, and asked whether he (Mr. Maclean) could deny that the Ilbert Bill was one step towards carrying out the Queen's Proclamation. That proclamation was issued after the close of the Indian Mutiny, after the country had been pacified. He ventured to say that India since 1858 had been governed in the spirit of that proclamation. The words of that proclamation, that "so far as might be" natives, of whatever creed, might be fairly and impartially admitted to offices, the duties of which they might be qualified by ability, integrity, and education to discharge, meant that so far as it might be consistent with the safety and honour of the country. It did not mean that natives were to be admitted to the highest offices in India. If they had been, it would have been a mockery of the Queen's Proclamation. If natives were to have been put on a perfect equality with Englishmen what justification would there have been for Englishmen to have stopped in the country at all? (Cheers.) They who opposed the Bill did not say that natives as judges were wanting in moral fitness for the position; what they did say was that by their race, habits, and incapacity to understand European character, they were disqualified for trying Europeans as judges in the country districts of India, and were likely to be imposed upon by false evidence; and that the character, liberties, and freedom of the European classes in India would, by this measure, be placed at the mercy of men who were not qualified to administer justice to Europeans. That was the whole contention of the opponents of the Bill, and he asked them whether it was not founded on fairness and justice. (Cheers.) Mr. Stanley said that the native magistrates had power to try Frenchmen, Spaniards, and persons of other European nationalities, and persons from the United States of America, and why not Englishmen? He must reply that an Englishman held a very different position in India from that of a member of any other European State. Mr. Stanley would lead anybody to imagine that India swarmed with Europeans of other nationalities. (Laughter.) They might travel days in India and never meet with one; and they might depend upon it that if any of those gentlemen Mr. Stanley spoke about went up the country they took care to nationalise themselves as Englishmen before going. (Cheers and laughter.) If the Ilbert Bill became law, India would not be a fit place for an Englishwoman to live in, and the Anglo-Indians asked the people of England to demand the withdrawal of the Bill on the ground of justice. It was most unfortunate that the Government had sent home misleading statements as to the opinions held in India, with respect to the Bill. It had taken a long time to convince the people of England what the opinion of the English people in India was on this matter. Associations had been formed and petitions presented, deputations had gone about and made speeches at public meetings, but they had carefully abstained from making a political display about it. They had said that Lord Ripon had made a great mistake, and asked the Government to withdraw the Bill. Lord Kimberley had treated them with supercilious disdain. He used these words:—"I am glad you have given me an opportunity of saying that the Government does not care what the feeling of the Anglo-Indians may be, the Government is determined to proceed with this Bill." (Shame.) From what Lord Kimberley had said to Mr. Atkins the other day, it was clear that he had entirely lost his temper in the matter. His lordship had evidently thought Mr. Atkins was only a small body, and that he would lecture him into a proper state of submissiveness to the Liberal Government, and give him to understand that he had better go back to India and tell the people that they must submit to this Bill—(laughter)—but Mr. Atkins did not seem to have seen the matter in the same light. (Cheers.) He had told Lord Kimberley what would be the effect of passing such a law as this, and the result was that his lordship quite forgot himself, and now he seemed to be bent on pushing forward the Bill no matter what the consequences might be. When he (Mr. Maclean) saw the way in which they had been received, and the manner in which their patient remonstrances had been treated and cast to the winds, he began to understand better than ever he did before the feeling generated in the minds of the American colonists by the insolent manner in which they were treated by the officials of Lord North's government in that country. (Cheers.) The Government now said they meant to pass the Bill, no matter what those most interested said against it. What would be the effect of this treatment on the minds of the Anglo-Indians? It was true they were a comparatively small body, but they were Englishmen and felt that justice was on their side, and he did not think they would submit patiently to a matter of this kind. (Cheers.) Anglo-Indians had not the means of protecting themselves as their fellow-countrymen had in this country. They were absolutely without a press on their side in all the towns and villages in India by which to assert their rights and bring them before the public, and get up a feeling by which to affect the Government. They had nothing in the way of a representative Government out in India—no power of controlling their own destinies. The council which passed laws consisted entirely of the nominees of the Liberal Ministry of this country. (Shame.) That council had become little less than a Liberal caucus. (Laughter.) The Legislative Council of India could pass a law, and directly it got the approval of the Secretary of State, it became the law, and was put in force. (Shame.) He maintained that it was a scandalous thing that the rights of an Englishman in India should be treated in this way. (Cheers.) Why was the measure not submitted to the Parliament of this country? He had no doubt the present Government could get the House of Commons to pass anything it proposed. (Laughter.) But there were checks. A Bill must not only pass the Commons but the House of Lords, and then receive the sanction of the Queen. Were Englishmen to be deprived of their rights because they were 6,000 miles away? If such a Bill did pass through Parliament and receive the assent of the Crown, and all three estates of the realm said the rights and liberties of Englishmen in India were to be sacrificed in this way, then they must submit, but, in present circumstances, would they submit? (No, no.) Resistance to such a measure was the right and the duty of every Englishman. (Loud cheers.)

Mr. ATKINS said Lord Kimberley had shown his ignorance of the number of his countrymen in India by having placed them in his statistics at 30,000 less than they really were. (Laughter.) Three fourths of the 70,000 Englishmen in India were scattered in the country districts. The Ilbert Bill would most seriously affect the English working men on railways, in mills, and in factories. The natives of India had more confidence in the English judges than in their own. Lord Kimberley had told him that he would not insert a clause in the Bill giving Englishmen the right of appeal to be tried by an Englishman. (Shame.) If the Bill were passed it would not only injure the English people there, but the natives as well, and endanger the stability of our rule in that country. Out of the millions in India not 5 per cent knew that the government of the country had been transferred from the East India Company to the Crown. He had resided twenty years in India, had travelled in every presidency and province in it, and could speak with some authority on the subject. (Hear, hear.) The present obnoxious measure threatened to deprive Anglo-Indians of their birth-right. As a Liberal in politics, and as a Christian he opposed the Bill. The Bill would injure all classes, and give to the native magistrate of India a greater power than the Lord Chief Justice of England at present possessed. Europeans did not fear personal assaults in India, but they did fear the readiness of revengeful natives to bring false charges against anyone who might unwittingly incur their displeasure. The Bengalee, whether rich or poor, wreaked his malice on a rival, and sought his revenge against an enemy, not by inconsiderate violence but by due course of law. He used the courts for the same purpose as an Englishman used a horsewhip, or a Californian a bowie knife. (Laughter.)

Colonel MALLESON said:—Gentlemen, in the words—the eloquent and inspiring words of Mr. Atkins, you have heard the message sent by the working-men of India to the working-men of England. It is impossible that you, who have hearts, who have sympathies, who have large interests at stake, can be indifferent to that appeal. Your countrymen in India make no extravagant request. They merely ask that you will aid them in being relieved from tyranny, against which every man in this room would revolt if it were attempted to impose it upon him.

Gentlemen, what is the reason for this measure, which has caused an uprising of English opinion in India, unparalleled in the history of that country? Its supporters have given one ground after another to justify it, only to abandon them, and they are now reduced to plead, in forma pauperis, that it ought to be accepted, because it is such a small measure. One would think that if the measure which has caused all this disturbance is so small that that is the very reason why it should not be persevered with. But still the cry is that at all costs, in spite of an all but universal British opposition against it, in spite of a coldness and lukewarmness on the part of the better classes of the natives of India, it is still to be persevered with at all hazards. Why, a noble lord, a supporter of the Bill, told a friend of mine, not long ago, that he fully concurred in the view that the Bengalis, whom this Bill most affected, were not fit to exercise criminal jurisdiction over Punjaubis, over Rohillas, or over Rajpoots. And yet he was prepared to grant to the same men, to whom he would deny jurisdiction over a superior class of natives, jurisdiction over Englishmen! (Shame.) Why, the whole thing was monstrous. If we were to leave India to-morrow, these men, these Bengalis, would be swept from the face of the earth by the more vigorous populations of the north, or they would be content to serve them, as before the advent of the English, they had served their forefathers. It was a disgrace to British rule in India that such a question as this should have been allowed to arise, a question which had produced a severance between native and European, greater even than had existed in the time of the Mutiny. These men did not properly understand the English language. They might have learned Milton by the page, and be able to quote Byron by the yard, but the dialect of a man from the north of England would puzzle them as much as would the peculiar phrases of a Cornishman or a Scotchman. From those parts of the United Kingdom your countrymen in India mainly come, and by this iniquitous law, their liberties are to be placed at the disposal of men who cannot understand their speech. It would be something if the British Government had been prepared to hear reason upon this question. But, as Mr. Maclean has told you, the respectful remonstrances of men who have filled the highest offices in India have been treated with contumely and contempt. I am very glad that Mr. Maclean drew your attention to the eloquent remarks of Franklin on a kindred topic. Yes, we had colonies then—colonies which the insolence of the Minister of the day lost to our country, and it is impossible to read the reply of Lord Derby to the respectful remonstrance of our Australian colonies, not to feel that the spirit which had cut loose America from England still ruled in Downing-street. (Loud cheers.) Colonel Malletson concluded with an impassioned appeal to his audience to support the prayer of their fellow-countrymen in India, and to show by their votes at the next election that they had no sympathy with the Ministers who had betrayed their trust. He sat down amidst cheering, which was continued for some minutes.

SIR BARTLE FRERE ON THE ILBERT BILL.

THE following letter has been addressed by the Right Hon. Sir Bartle Frere, G.C.B., to Mr. Fogg and Mr. Setna, the hon. secretaries of the committee formed to support Lord Ripon's policy in India:—

"Wressell-lodge, Wimbledon-common, Nov. 27, 1883.

"Dear Sirs,—Absence from home and other circumstances have delayed my acknowledgment of your letter drawing my attention to your printed notification on the subject of the Ilbert Bill, and asking my consent to your including my name in the list you propose to publish of those who support Lord Ripon's Indian policy, and, further, asking me to join your committee. I beg to return my cordial thanks for the honour you have thus done me, but it is with great regret that I find myself unable to comply with your requests.

"The Charter Act of 1833 and the Queen's Proclamation of 1858 are quoted in your printed notification as the declarations of national policy which you desire to affirm and support. I believe that every act of my own official life has been in complete accordance with the principles of the policy so defined. Mr. Fogg, who has known my public life intimately during a great portion of my actual service in India, and who was in India at the time I refer to, will be able to support my assertion that as a member of Lord Canning's Council twenty-four years ago, and subsequently as Governor of Bombay, I did not flinch, under very adverse circumstances of time and popular feeling, in giving all the practical effect in my power to the just and noble policy of the Queen's Proclamation of 1858.

"But in the Ilbert Bill, as originally published, I could find no new provision for the impartial admission to judicial office, without regard to race or creed, of men 'qualified by their education, ability, and integrity' for the due discharge of high judicial office. That had been secured and habitually acted on for many years before the Ilbert Bill was thought of. I could see in the Bill only the removal of very salutary provisions, which all Indian experience tells us are necessary to insure a fair trial to a large and most important class of Her Majesty's subjects in India—I mean, of course, British-born Europeans—a class on which depends the preservation of peace and the political cohesion of all the varied races throughout India. The Bill legalised the indiscriminate entrusting of high judicial powers over this important class to men who, experience shows, are frequently not qualified for the due discharge of such judicial functions over alien races, either by 'education, ability, or integrity.' This seemed to me not a carrying out of the Queen's Proclamation, but its reversal. It would give preponderating influence to race qualification, without any reference to special individual fitness, without any corresponding care that the persons selected for judicial authority from the native races should be strong in what are at present notoriously the weakest natural points of those races. The Bill seemed to me essentially a retrograde step and a most dangerous one, calculated injuriously to affect the due and impartial administration of justice.

"I hoped that, when discussed, a measure which seemed to me so ill-judged and so entirely uncalled for would be withdrawn or essentially modified, and I delayed any public expression of my own opinion, expecting either that some good reasons would be given for persevering with the measure or that it would be dropped. Since then the opinions (unanswerable, as they seem to me) of the Judge of the High Court of Calcutta, of Mr. Justice Stephen, and of a host of the most experienced, able, and impartial public servants in India and in this country have been published, adverse to the Bill. On the other hand, in the published arguments on its behalf I can find little but persistent misrepresentation of the motives and arguments of its opponents and evasion of the points really at issue, while the management of the controversy by the advocates of the Bill (I say this without the slightest reference to the gentlemen I have the honour of addressing) has been marked by incidents, some of which fill me with shame as an Englishman and others with the most gloomy forebodings as one who loves India, and has spent the best part of his life in her service.

"Holding these views, I cannot believe that in signing the petition, of which your notification contains a draft, asking the support of Parliament to the Ilbert Bill, I shall be 'supporting the progressive and conciliatory measures' of the Government of India, or in any way 'promoting the interests of the people of India.'

"The Bill seems to be retrograde, calculated to raise dangerous race hatred and discord, and altogether opposed to the best interests of the people of India and to the spirit of the Queen's Proclamation of 1858.

"The Bill has already caused an incalculable amount of mischief, and the only wise and salutary course the Government can adopt under the circumstances would, in my opinion, be to withdraw it.

"I remain, dear Sirs, your obedient servant,

"H. B. E. FRERE.

"To George Fogg, Esq., and A. K. Setna, Esq., Hon. Secretaries to the British India Committee."

THE ILBERT BILL.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "TIMES."

SIR,—The Times of the 28th inst. contains a letter written by order of Lord Kimberley, in which he very courteously expresses his belief that I have "not intentionally misrepresented him," but at the same time his lordship "emphatically denies" that he told me that he "wished particularly that it should be clearly understood that the English Government had nothing whatever to do with the Bill, which had been initiated by Lord Ripon."

As this sentence forms part of the message which (according to my own notes) Lord Kimberley desired me to send to "the people in India," I venture to think it is of great importance that Lord Kimberley should let the public know precisely what he really wished me to say. In the former letter, written by Lord Kimberley's orders and published in the Times last Saturday, Mr. Maitland admits that his lordship had mentioned "that the Bill originated with the Government of India." With regard to the rest of his lordship's message to the working men of India, while I still venture to think that my own notes (taken down immediately after the interview) were strictly accurate, I am of course perfectly ready to transmit Lord Kimberley's present views as to what should be the wording of the message. Only, in fairness both to me and the public, I respectfully submit that Lord Kimberley should publicly state what that wording should be, with a view to prevent any further misunderstanding.—Yours obediently,

F. T. ATKINS,

THE ILBERT BILL.

A MEETING of the Executive Committee of the Anglo-Indian Association for obtaining the withdrawal of the Indian Criminal Procedure Act Amendment Bill was held at Limmer's Hotel, on the 23rd ultimo, when the following Resolutions were passed:—

RESOLUTIONS.

"1. That this Committee view with deep regret the announcement made by the Earl of Northbrook last week at Bristol, that the Government of India, with the sanction of Her Majesty's Government, have resolved to pass into law those sections of the 'Indian Criminal Procedure Act Amendment Bill,' which will render European British subjects amenable to the jurisdiction of Native Magistrates of districts, and of Native Sessions Judges, notwithstanding the fact that a large majority of the officials in India who were consulted on the Bill have recommended its entire withdrawal, while most of the reports which support the passing of the Bill in a modified form, contain observations which are equivalent to a condemnation of its principle."

"2. That, after a careful perusal of the reports in question, this Committee find in those documents ample justification for, and corroboration of, the objections urged in the Memorial presented to the Secretary of State in July last against any alteration of the law on this subject, as settled by the legislation of 1872."

"3. That the antagonism of race which has been excited by the introduction of Mr. Ilbert's Bill will be in no way allayed by the limitations announced by the Earl of Northbrook; but that, on the contrary, while Englishmen in India will regard with resentment and apprehension the withdrawal of the immunity from the jurisdiction of Native Criminal Courts in the Mofussil, which they have hitherto enjoyed, that section of the native community which has been encouraged to agitate in favour of the Bill, as originally introduced, will consider the passing of the measure in the modified form in which it is proposed to pass it, as an inducement to agitate for the removal of the limitations which are still to be retained—a state of things which cannot fail to be detrimental to the prosperity and good government of India.”

“4. That the action of the present Government of India, and of Her Majesty's Government in this matter, is singularly at variance with the policy acted upon by preceding Governments, including the Government of which Mr. Gladstone was the head from 1868 to 1874.”

“5. That the contention of the Earl of Northbrook, and of other supporters of the Bill, that the measure is rendered necessary by the provisions of the East India Company's Charter Act of 1833, and by the Queen's Proclamation of 1858, is inconsistent with the injunction issued by the Duke of Argyll in 1869, in connection with the policy of giving the natives of India a larger share of employment in the administration of their own country, that ‘it never should be forgotten, and there should never be any hesitation in laying down the principle, that it is one of our first duties towards the people of India to guard the safety of our own dominion.’”

“6. That this injunction makes it perfectly plain that it was not deemed safe by the Government of Mr. Gladstone in 1869 to treat the Statute of 1833, or the Proclamation of 1858, as ‘the guide of their conduct,’ to the extent of demanding a disregard of all distinctions of race in carrying on the government of India.”

“7. That, during the period which has since elapsed, nothing has occurred to justify a departure from the policy which was thus prescribed only a few years ago, which has hitherto been acted upon by English Statesmen on both sides of politics, and which is still advocated by the great majority of persons experienced in Indian administration.”

“8. That this Committee desire, in conclusion, to place on record their earnest protest against the imputation which has been freely levelled against the opponents of Mr. Ilbert's Bill, notably by the Marquis of Hartington in a speech in the House of Commons in August last, that they are actuated by sentiments of antagonism to the policy of advancing natives of India in the public service, as embodied in the Statutes of 1833 and 1870, and in Her Majesty's Proclamation of 1858. Their objections are directed, not against the advancement of natives of proved merit and ability, and of tried integrity, to any offices for which they may be deemed qualified, subject to the reasonable and wise limitation prescribed by the Duke of Argyll, but only against conferring upon natives holding certain appointments a jurisdiction which, if conferred, would very rarely have to be exercised, which is therefore not needed for administrative reasons, and which cannot be conferred without depriving Englishmen in India of a highly valued and perfectly innocuous privilege.”

THE ILBERT BILL.

THE following letter from the India Office has been received by the President of the Anglo-Indian Association (London Committee), in reply to the letter of Nov. 7:—

India Office, S.W., Nov. 27, 1883.

“Sir,—I am directed to acknowledge the receipt of your letter of the 7th instant, transmitting a further memorial addressed to the Secretary of State for India in Council by yourself and others on behalf of the London Committee of the Anglo-Indian Association, on the subject of the Bill to amend the Code of Criminal Procedure now under the consideration of the Governor-General of India in Council.

In reply I am to state that a memorial from certain European British subjects, assembled at a public meeting, held in the Town Hall, Calcutta, on Aug. 23 last, urging the postponement of the Bill on grounds similar to those set forth in the memorial forwarded by you, was transmitted to the Secretary of State by the Government of India, who have been informed that Her Majesty's Government do not see any good reason why a measure, which lies entirely within the competence of the Indian Legislative Council, and is already before that body, should be postponed until Parliament meets.

I am to add that the reports, to which you refer, are printing, and will be published here as soon as they are ready.—I the honour to be, Sir, your obedient servant,

“J. A. GODLEY.

“Sir Alex. J. Arbuthnot, K.C.S.I.”

quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact, the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him fiveCOCKLE'S PILLSwill never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my faith as a 'medicine man' had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX- PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally be practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutions throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 20 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Nov. 23; Madras and Allahabad, Nov. 21; Calcutta, Nov. 20.

THE Viceroy's speech on the Ilbert Bill last Friday was a disappointment to those who had hoped against hope, that Lord Ripon would repent even at the eleventh hour. The vanity of a weak nature has triumphed over every other consideration; and we fear now that there can no longer be any doubt as to the intention of the Viceroy to use his despotic power to ride rough-shod over the feelings and the opinions of every Englishman and Englishwoman in India. And this is a "Liberal" Government! Surely the name might be changed, if only for decency's sake.

A MORE disingenuous letter than that of Mr. Hunter to the Times has seldom been published. Mr. Hunter claims Sir Frederick Halliday, Sir Richard Temple, and Sir Ashley Eden, as supporters of the Bill to outweigh the opinion of the present Lieutenant Governor of Bengal—when it is notorious that the three gentlemen named are only restrained by official discipline, or other considerations of delicacy, from coming forward to condemn the Bill; and Mr. Stokes has already come forward to contradict Mr. Hunter. Moreover, he supports the claim of the "statutory civilians" to the criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects, though he virtually admits their unfitness. But as the Times very justly points out, the whole of Mr. Hunter's argument is no better than "playing with the subject." It might be thought smart in a debating society; but in a member of the Legislative Council of the Viceroy, such cynical insincerity is painful.

THE situation in Calcutta is exactly such as we have all along predicted it would become, if Lord Ripon persisted in his criminal recklessness; and we are quite sure that all loyal and thoughtful subjects there, whether Native or English, are trembling to think what a day may bring forth. The lower classes of Natives, inflamed by interested agitators and the tacit instigation of the Viceroy, are evidently aggressive to a degree highly dangerous to the public peace—witness the shouts of "English pigs" heard on the return from the Dum-Dum races; whilst the English working-classes are exasperated by a despotic tyranny which is utterly incomprehensible and hateful to them, and are unfortunately unable to dissociate the Viceroy's Native allies from complicity in the Viceroy's guilt. That the true leaders of Calcutta society, both Native and English, will do all they can to quiet this ruinous outcome of Radical imbecility, we cannot doubt; and we trust that even yet the British Indian Association, as representing the Native aristocracy, will come forward to pray the Viceroy to pause in his mad career.

It is perfectly obvious that Lord Ripon, if he cared for anything but his own paltry vanity in the matter, would thankfully accept the very reasonable and really ingenious suggestion of the Statesman, of a compromise that would fulfil all the just demands of both sides. For it would give every native magistrate full and complete jurisdiction, and would only reserve to European British subjects that right of "challenge," which they enjoy unquestioned in every other part of Her Majesty's dominions. It is certain that this compromise is the only one that would be reasonably acceptable to natives—for it is the only one by which all "disqualifications based on race only" can be removed from deputy magistrates and other uncovenanted officers as well as from Lord Ripon's privileged "statutory" civilians.

THE loyal demonstrations which have greeted the Duke and Duchess of Connaught everywhere, during the stay of their Royal Highnesses in Calcutta, afford ample proof, if any were needed, that the loyal Englishmen of India do not hold England responsible for crimes that are her misfortune, not her fault.

It is instructive to note the attitude of the Radical press towards the English working-men of Calcutta. At first, the Radicals said that the agitation was all the work of the Calcutta lawyers and merchants; and Mr. Bright, in his speech at Mr. Foggo's meeting in Willis's Rooms, went out of his way to sneer at the statement of the Anglo-Indian Association that the English working-men in India would be the chief sufferers from the Bill. They declared, too, that the agitation was altogether a hollow one, and would soon die out. Now that the agitation has not only not died out, but has obviously become more embittered than ever, they turn round, and—instead of blaming those "statesmen" (Heaven save the mark!) who were unable to discern the difference between the honest resentment of persecuted Englishmen, and the clamour of an insignificant clique—they taunt the victims of the Viceroy's tyranny with all the foolish acts to which that tyranny has driven their despair. Of course, it must be said of these poor men—as Mr. Lethbridge observed in the National Review for December—that "they are greatly damaging their cause with us at home, who contemplate their unphilosophical despair from the snug vantage-ground of a London arm-chair." But the man must have a bad and cruel heart who can deride the desperation of Englishmen driven into a corner by a narrow-minded despot, in the way that the Daily News does, or the cartoon in this week's Punch.

THIS is the truthful and ingenuous paragraph in which the Radical Leeds Mercury refers to the shamefully unjust cartoon:—

"A bad example to the elephant." Mr. Tenniel in this week's Punch draws a very suggestive lesson from the hostile attitude of certain members of the Indian Civil Service towards the Marquis of Ripon. The Viceroy, as an elephant driver, is being worried and crossed by the occupants of the howdah behind him. The elephant shows a world of meaning in his eye. If his masters are thus divided in opinion as to the best method of guiding him, why may he not do without their guidance at all? We commend the picture to those who are doing their best, not merely to prevent a fair and reasonable measure of justice being dealt out to our Indian fellow-subjects, but also to make the native conceive a contempt for his European conqueror."

WE are glad to hear that a strong committee is being formed in London to petition the Secretary of State for India to instruct the Government of India to withdraw or postpone the confiscatory "Bengal Tenancy Bill." The breach of the Permanent Settlement involved in this Bill naturally renders it most distasteful to past and present members of the Bengal Civil Service, to whom the good faith and honour of the British Government are as dear as their lives. The general committee—consisting of those Anglo-Indians, now resident in Great Britain or Ireland, who object to the Bill—already numbers about 150. Anglo-Indians willing to join this righteous movement are requested to send their names to Roper Lethbridge, Esq., 19, Clanricarde-gardens, London, W.

THE magnificent dais of richly coloured marble, on which the Viceroy and the Duke of Connaught stood at the opening of the exhibition, was exhibited by Mr. Silbiger, the well-known Austrian contractor. The whole of it is marble of the finest quality procurable in Germany, in various designs, chiefly mosaic; and its very handsome platform, which is ascended by seven rows of steps, the first being more massive than the rest, measures 18ft. by 12ft., and is 2ft. 6in. high. The dais, which occupies a central position in the east quadrangle of the Museum, is covered with a gorgeous canopy supplied by Messrs. C. Lazarus and Co., of Calcutta. The entire quadrangle is covered with cloth made up of strips of red, white, and blue. The erection of the dais was placed under the able supervision of Mr. Whitmore Girling.

We have the satisfaction to announce that H.H. Maharaja Takhtsingjee, K.C.S.I., Thakore Saheb of Bhownagar, has become a Life Member of the National Indian Association.

MR. JOGODESH CHUNDER BOSE, B.A. (Calcutta), Christ's College, Cambridge, has passed the B.Sc. Examination of the University of London (Branches 3, 4, 5).

MR. VENKATANARASIAH NARASU (Inner Temple) has passed the Michaelmas Inns of Court Examination, obtaining a certificate from the Council of Legal Education that he has passed a public examination.

DR. M. L. DUTT has passed the M.R.C.P. (of London) Examination.

MR. KHUSHWAKT RAI has passed the Preliminary Examination of the Inns of Court, and has joined the Inner Temple.

MR. ABDUL VAHID and Mr. Ramdas Chubildas have joined Christ's College, Cambridge.

THE following were the number of visitors that attended the Indian Museum at South Kensington from Oct. 6 to Dec. 1 inclusive:—Oct. 6, 1,990; Oct. 13, 1,650; Oct. 20, 2,294; Oct. 27, 3,338; Nov. 3, 2,929; Nov. 10, 929; Nov. 17, 928; Nov. 24, 892; Dec. 1, 900. Total number for the month of October, 11,390; and November, 4,099. Total number from the opening on May 15, 1880, 588,251.

We take the following account of the Calcutta Indigo Market from Messrs. William Moran and Co.'s Market Report:—

"During the past week four public sales have been held, at which 3,154 chests were offered; of this quantity 2,370 chests found buyers. Ordinary and middling native Oudes, of which descriptions the bulk of the catalogues has again consisted, have varied somewhat in value, occasionally showing a decline of about Rs. 5 per maund on previous rates; the market for these qualities, however, closes rather firmer. Good and desirable parcels of Oudes have again been in strong demand, and partly owing to their scarceness, and partly to the continued absence of Bengal and Tirhoot qualities from which to execute Continental orders, have been keenly competed for at very full prices. The few small parcels from Bengal and Behar that have been offered have met with good demand. The total quantity out of the market is now about 22,500 maunds."

THE same authority has the following on the Calcutta Tea Market for the week ending Nov. 20:—

"Sales were held on the 15th inst., when 11,877 packages were offered, and 11,311 were sold. There was good competition, prices hardened, and on a few desirable lots there was a rise of half an anna per pound. Good and finest Pekoe Souchongs, and also broken Pekoes were principally in demand."

At the Royal Asiatic Society on Monday, Dec. 17, at 4 p.m., Mr. W. F. Sinclair, B.S.C., will read a paper "On the Fishes of Western India."

We take the following obituary for the week ending Nov. 23, from the Times of India:—The heir-apparent of the State of Jheend.

THE Englishman gives the following account of the Calcutta freight market for the week ending Nov. 20:—

"There have been almost no fluctuations in this market during the past week. Steamer rates have remained firm, and sailing vessels have accepted previous rates, but the amount of business doing is very small. Towards the close a little pressure for sharp shipment sent Cape rates up slightly. If our E. I. By. would follow the example of its sister on the western side of the Continent, and reduce its rates during the dull season, it might result in giving its rolling stock a little more work to do instead of keeping it standing idle, in bringing down to the coast some portion of the stock of wheat still retained up-country. But on the contrary they seem more anxious to prevent business at the moment by raising their already high rates. Three vessels took the London berth, one was chartered for Dundee and one for Mauritius, our unfixed tonnage remaining at about 45,000 tons."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

"At the meeting of the Legislative Council to-day the Viceroy made a statement concerning the Ilbert Bill. He said that he regretted to find that the long silence of the Government had been attributed to a want of consideration for the feelings of the opponents of the measure. Nothing was further from his wish than to fail in consideration or courtesy towards others. The silence was unavoidable, as he would proceed to show."

"The last public step, he said, with respect to the Bill had been taken on the 9th of March, when the Council ordered it to be referred to the local Governments for their reports. It had been so referred, and the last report upon it had reached Simla on the 24th of July. The reports had been carefully considered, and by the 10th of August the Government of India, was in a position to state its views, which it did in a despatch of that date to the Secretary of State. Those views were that jurisdiction over Europeans should be conferred upon native District Judges, and magistrates ex officio; that the existing powers of the local Governments with regard to the appointment of justices of the peace should be maintained; and that certain suggestions of the Chief Justice of Madras, intended to empower the High Court to order the transfer of cases, should be adopted. He felt bound to add that General Wilson had dissented from this despatch, and had adhered to his original objection to the principle of the Bill."

"In September, the Government had received from the Anglo-Indian Defence Association a memorial, containing two prayers—first, that the local opinions should be published at once; secondly, that the Bill should not be proceeded with until Parliament had had an opportunity of considering those opinions. The memorial was immediately forwarded to the Secretary of State. Its first prayer had been answered by the publication of the opinions at the earliest possible moment."

"The Secretary of State, on November 8, had replied to the despatch of the 10th of August, and also to the despatch forwarding the memorial. In his reply he had expressed his concurrence in the views of the Government of India, as to the modification to be made in the Bill, and on the question of a postponement he stated that the Queen's Government did not agree that it would be well to refer the matter to Parliament; and that in these circumstances they concluded the Bill would be pressed to its remaining stages before the end of the Calcutta Sessions."

"That despatch, added the Viceroy, had been received only last Saturday; and, therefore, it was impossible for him to make any statement before to-day. He had seen it urged that a statement might have been made on the telegraphic summary of the despatch. But such a statement would have been obviously unsatisfactory. Moreover, a statement regarding a matter pending before the Legislature could be made with propriety only in the Legislative Council; and this was its first meeting since October."

"As to the prayer that the Bill should be postponed until the local opinions had been brought before Parliament, that was a matter entirely beyond the scope of the Government of India. He would have been glad if it could have been done; but it was a matter for Her Majesty's Ministers, not for him. The next step would ordinarily be to refer the Bill to a select committee, who would consider any amendments that might be proposed. In the absence of two members of the Executive Government, the Commander-in-Chief and General Wilson, who had not yet returned to Calcutta, he could not say when that step would be taken, or whether any and what further amendments would be proposed. The matters must be settled in the full Executive Council, and the members of this (sitting) Council would receive due notice."

"In conclusion, he would repeat that neither he nor the Government had any wish to appear indifferent to the feelings of the opposition, and he hoped that no word he had uttered that day would add to the bitterness of the controversy."

"This morning the Duke of Connaught reviewed the Volunteers and the garrison. His Royal Highness and the Duchess were present at the meeting of the Legislative Council. The Duke was engaged yesterday and to-day in receiving and returning the visits of the native princes now in Calcutta."

"The Akha tribe, who lately raided into Assam when required to give up their prisoners, returned an insolent answer, demanding the surrender of the entire forest reserve of about 100 square miles. An expedition will be sent against them, consisting of the 43d Assam Native Infantry, a portion of the 12th Native Infantry, and some Sappers. Brigadier-General Hill will command this force. Two captives are still alive, the third having died after a few days' illness."

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Dec. 9:—

"The Viceroy's speech in the Legislative Council on Friday last has not been favourably received by the Anglo-Indian Press and public. The apology for his lordship's long silence is regarded as wholly inadequate. Every one knows that it is not customary to publish the contents of a despatch on a mere telegraphic summary, but every one feels that Lord Ripon could easily have found ways and means of taking the public into his confidence long ago, had he been disposed to do so. His twice-repeated declaration that the Indian Government has no power to control the proceedings of Parliament was unnecessary. No one ever claimed such power for the Indian Government. The whole speech marked in the most emphatic manner the position of complete subserviency to which Lord Ripon has reduced the Viceroyalty, and the extraordinary way in which every petty detail is now referred to the Secretary of State for the first time in the history of India. The Viceroy has openly stated that, personally anxious as he is to obtain the opinion of Parliament on the Bill, he is yet powerless to postpone a discussion on a matter of merely municipal legislation for a few months without leave from home. No wonder people are beginning to ask whether it is worth while to burden the country with the cost of a Viceroy and his Council who have wholly abdicated their functions and allowed themselves to sink to the level of a machine for registering the Secretary of State's orders.

"My telegrams of last week to the Times will have shown how wide has become the breach between Lord Ripon and the Anglo-Indian community. On the Viceroy's arrival at the opening of the exhibition, at the exhibition dinner, held at Government-house on Tuesday, at the Levee on Wednesday, and the Drawing Room on Friday—on each of these occasions non-officials were conspicuous by their absence. However much this is to be regretted, it is not unnatural. The genuine burst of enthusiasm which has greeted the arrival and every public appearance of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught proves that the community is not wanting in loyalty, and that its attitude of cold reserve is adopted towards Lord Ripon personally, not towards the Viceroy as such.

"The counter-demonstrations made by the natives are the most deplorable feature in this deplorable state of affairs. Beyond doubt these demonstrations were not spontaneous, but the work of a few agitators. For days before the Viceroy's arrival, thousands of handbills urging the natives to turn out and welcome him were in circulation. On the day of his arrival some journals which have sedulously fomented the agitation were printed in letters of gold. The native welcome, like the European display of coldness, was intended for Lord Ripon personally, not for the Queen's representative; and just as the attitude of the Europeans shows how thoroughly Lord Ripon has exasperated that portion of the community by trying to force upon them an obnoxious and unnecessary law, against all advice and with, as they believe, no other reason than to gratify his amour propre, so the attitude of the natives proves how dangerous an appetite for further concessions he has aroused, and how thoroughly he has succeeded in setting class against class.

"The situation is most critical. It cannot be doubted that the leaders of the opposition will not countenance anything beyond a show of cold reserve towards Lord Ripon personally, and that they will do their best in the future, as they have done in the past, to prevent any demonstrations against the Government; but how long will these efforts be successful? Already there are signs of the danger of the lower orders escaping from control. Lord Ripon has been more than once hooted in the streets. Nor is the feeling confined to Europeans. On the afternoon of the Viceroy's arrival, when the members of Calcutta society were driving back to town from the Dumdum Races, groups of natives along the roadside assailed the carriages of European ladies and gentlemen with shouts of 'Long live the Viceroy! Victory to Ripon!' interspersed with opprobrious epithets and low terms of abuse, such as 'English pigs.' In ordinary circumstances, this demonstration would have been insignificant and contemptible. At present it cannot be regarded lightly. In a word, the situation is now so strained that any trifling incident—a street fracas, for instance, between a European and a native, may produce a riot which might have most lamentable and far-reaching consequences. One word from the Viceroy, the intimation of an intention to adopt the manly and straightforward course of withdrawing the Bill, would put an immediate end to this most dangerous and deplorable tension. It is much to be feared, however, that he does not realise the situation, or mean to speak that word.

"Is there, then, any possible compromise? The Calcutta Statesman, a journal which in the earlier stages of the controversy strongly supported the Bill, has suggested that while a native magistrate might be empowered to try a European prisoner who did not object to that course, the latter should be entitled to claim a trial before a magistrate of his own race. The suggestion is deserving of the attention of the Government. The European community would prefer to see the Bill dropped altogether, but if Lord Ripon still declines to take that course, then there can be little doubt, that they would so far meet him as to accept a measure which would found the jurisdiction of a native magistrate on the defendant's consent.

"Last week's newspapers give reports of meetings against the Ilbert Bill, held in Lahore, Madras, Jorehaut, Dehra-Doon, Nowgong, Wynaad, Ranchee, and many other places in different parts of the country. All these meetings passed resolutions strongly in condemning the measure and refusing to accept it, even in the modified form described by Lord Northbrook. Hardly a day passes without such a meeting being held somewhere—a clear proof if any where needed, that the opposition to the Bill is not confined to Calcutta, or even to Bengal, but that it is universal among Englishmen throughout India.

"The Duke and Duchess of Connaught have been busily occupied during the past week in sight-seeing. On the first three days of their visit the weather was most unfavourable. A cloudy sky, constant rain, and a strong, chilly wind took the place of the usual bright, fresh winter days of Bengal, while the muddy streets almost gave Calcutta the aspect of London in November. The illuminations and the display of fireworks fixed for Thursday last, were postponed, and will be given to-morrow—which has been declared a public holiday in honour of the Royal visit. On Thursday evening, however, in spite of the inclement weather, the Duke and Duchess attended a dinner and evening party at Belvedere, the residence of the Lieutenant Governor, who had happily so far recovered from his illness as to be able to receive them. On Wednesday they visited the exhibition. Every public appearance of the illustrious pair has been the signal for an enthusiastic demonstration of welcome. They will leave to-morrow night for Benares, where they will spend two days; and a similar period will be devoted to Lucknow, after which they are to return to Meerut.

"The heavy rain at the beginning of last week came too late to do any good to the crops. And it is not unlikely that it has done much harm by washing the grain out of the growing rice. For two days the state of the weather presented the appearance of an approaching cyclone, unprecedented even at this season. Sharp storms seem to have broken over the Bay of Bengal, but they did not attain cyclonic dimensions. The ordinary December weather has now set in again.

"The exhibition, although still in a very incomplete state, attracts large crowds of visitors, the attendance being about 10,000 daily. The report read by Colonel Trevor at the opening ceremony states that the floor space amounts to 300,000 square feet, on which are gathered 100,000 articles, sent by 2,800 exhibitors. Some of these articles are placed in the Indian Museum, and in the new building beside it; others in temporary sheds, erected on the Maidan, and connected with the main buildings by a light bridge over the Chowringhee Road. It is reported that some sheds are not waterproof, and that many exhibits have been damaged by Tuesday's and Wednesday's rain. So far, however, I have seen small appearance of any such damage. The main interest of the exhibition centres in the Indian Courts, which certainly contain the most complete collection of Indian products and industries ever presented to the public.

"Another feature which attracts much attention is the display of jewellery contributed by various Princes and chiefs. Some idea of the richness of this part of the show may be gathered from the fact that one contributor alone, the Maharajah of Burdwan, has lent jewels valued at over £300,000.

"The total collapse of the electric light at the opening ceremony was at first attributed to a supposed cutting of the wires by some malicious person. An examination of the wires, however, has proved beyond doubt that they were not cut, but that, being too small to carry the current, they were fused by the heat.

"Owing to frequent complaints of a recent great increase of drunkenness throughout Bengal, the Lieutenant Governor has appointed a commission of inquiry into the out-still system, and the general working of the excise laws. Mr. Edgar, of the Civil Service, will preside over the commission, which will inspect the greater part of the province and investigate the matter locally.

"The expedition which is about to be sent against the Akhas will probably be strengthened by a mountain battery from the Punjab.

"The exploring expedition sent to the Takht-i-Suleiman, is returning, and has probably recrossed the frontier before now. It has been ascertained that the Takht is not one mountain, but consists of two parallel ridges, distant about four miles from each other, and joined by a plateau of about one mile in breadth, which runs from the northern peak of the western range to the southern peak, of the eastern range. The southern peak, on which is 'Solomon's Throne,' is very steep, and almost inaccessible, while the northern, which is higher, is well wooded. The view obtained is described as magnificent. The Sheorani tribesmen opposed the expedition because they had an idea that it was intended to carry the hill away, and plant it in British territory. Their attack was repulsed with a loss to them of about twelve men, the casualties on our side being only two or three wounded.

"The Duke and Duchess of Connaught and the Viceregal party spent Sunday at Barrackpore, and returned to Calcutta yesterday morning. In the evening the town was illuminated, and there was a display of fireworks on the race-course, which the Royal visitors witnessed from the Grand Stand. The Duke and Duchess left here at 9 23 p.m., their departure being kept private. The Duke expressed himself as delighted with his visit to Calcutta.

"Balukpong, a village on the river Bhoroli, on the Akha frontier, has been selected as the rendezvous of the troops which are to take part in the expedition against the Akha tribe. The infantry are now en route. Half a battery of Mountain Artillery is expected to arrive from the Punjab with two guns. As mules are not suitable for the Akha country, the guns will be carried by a corps of transport coolies.

"Disturbances have broken out in Bikaner. The 7th Bombay Native Infantry and three guns have been ordered to proceed there from Nusseerabad, and also a Mhairwarra battalion from Ajmere, and detachments of the Deoli and Eringura Irregulars."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

HODSON, OF HODSON'S HORSE.*

MR. GEORGE HODSON, the Vicar of Enfield, has, we are glad to see, brought out a new edition of this thrilling record of a wonderful life. For more than twenty years past the story of the achievements of that prince of partisan-officers, Hodson, of Hodson's Horse, has kindled the ardour of many a young Englishman going out to India to seek the bubble, Reputation, at the cannon's mouth; and we trust that there never will be wanting gallant men among our soldiers, who will burn to follow the example here sketched for them. The present reviewer first read this "Twelve Years of a Soldier's Life in India," during an unavoidable halt at a very remote dak-bungalow in the plains of India, now many years ago; and the deep impression produced by the simple recital of deeds of extraordinary courage and resolution has never been lost. It is, therefore, with especial pleasure that we hail the appearance of a new edition; for Mr. Hodson has prefixed to it a complete vindication of the memory of his heroic brother from the curiously vindictive slanders lately published by Mr. Bosworth Smith in his "Life of Lord Lawrence," which were noticed at the time with strong disapproval in these columns. And on the fly-leaf appears the testimony of a companion-in-arms of Hodson, whose word ought to be conclusive in the matter, even to Mr. Bosworth Smith:—

* "Hodson, of Hodson's Horse; or Twelve Years of a Soldier's Life in India." Being extracts from the letter of the late Major W. S. R. Hodson, B.A., Trinity College, Cambridge, First Bengal European Fusiliers, Commandant of 'Hodson's Horse.' With a vindication from the attack of Mr. Bosworth Smith. Edited by his brother, GEORGE H. HODSON, M.A., F.S.A., Vicar of Enfield, Prebendary of St. Paul's late senior fellow of Trinity College, Cambridge. Fourth edition, London: Kegan Paul, Trench, and Co., 1883.

"Dear Mr. Hodson,—I am much obliged for the perusal of your Preface to the new edition of your memoir of your brother.

"I am now, as I have always been, fully convinced of his honour and integrity.—Believe me, dear Mr. Hodson, yours very truly,

"NAPIER OF MAGDALA."

"I trust I have done my duty." These were Major Hodson's last words to the writer of the above letter, after the fatal shot at the capture of the Begun's Palace at Lucknow. And in writing these words to the disconsolate widow, Colonel Napier added—"I could have no difficulty in answering this question, as the voice of everyone in the country proclaims it." The story of the hero's death is told with graphic force by an old Sutherland Highlander, who was at his elbow at the fatal moment; and it has been reserved for a Radical doctrinaire surveying the terrible scenes of the Mutiny from the snug library of a Harrow "house," to defile the grave of one of the bravest of Englishmen with the statement, absolutely untrue in every particular, that "early in the following year he was killed in the act of 'looting' in a house at Delhi!"

CORRESPONDENCE.

THE ONLY POSSIBLE COMPROMISE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—As this uncalled for and indefensible Ilbert's Bill seems to have passed in defiance of all remonstrance, the only alleviation and alternative seems to be a strong appeal that Europeans should (as in many other countries) have a right, if they claim it, to be tried by the nearest magistrate or judge of their own race.

AN OLD RESIDENT OF FORTY YEARS IN INDIA.

RAICHORE.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—In page 1342 of your paper of the 7th. inst., you have commented on the paralysis in constructing railway works in India, owing to Her Majesty's Government having decided to move next year that the extension of railways in India shall be referred to a select committee of the House of Commons.

On our railways depend the efficiency of our English army. That army was estimated to be in 1884, 14,000 below its proper strength; by offering rupees 120 to time-expired soldiers for reenlistment, 6,000 veterans have been secured, but how are 8,000 more to be supplied?

There is urgent necessity for strengthening Raichore, lying in North latitude 16 deg. 12 min., East longitude 77 deg. 25 min. Of all great railway bridges in India, the most important probably is that which spans the Kistna River, which bounds Southern India on the north. This bridge, sixteen miles north of Raichore has thirty-six openings of 100 feet each. It must be defended by us against all attempts to injure it, either by Mohammedans of the Hyderabad territory from the north-east, or by Mohammedans of Kurmool from the south-east, or by rebels in fireboats, which might be floated down the Beema and Ristna Rivers.

This bridge connects Madras and Bangalore with Poona and Bombay.

It is well to remember how the Hindoo Empire of Southern India was destroyed by the Mohammedans at the battle of Talikote in A.D. 1565. Talikote lies about sixteen miles north by west of the high banks of the Kistna, which near Jul Droog falls 400 feet in about three miles. Had there been a fortified bridge the Hindoo power might have been saved.

A railway, 120 miles in length, westward from Raichore, through Moodgul to the railway junction at Guduk, would enable us to reinforce Raichore at any time speedily.

While Government is publishing its desires to defend the Roore-Bukhur Bridge, which may not be constructed for five years to come, I do not hear of anything being done to protect the magnificent bridge over the Indus River, two and a-half miles south of Attock.—Your obedient servant,

Dec. 10.

TO THE EDITOR OF "ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL."

SIR,—On the 21st of November, on the invitation of Lord Kimberley, I attended at the India Office, and made his Lordship acquainted with the views the working-men in India held regarding the Ilbert Bill. A brief account of this interview appeared in the Times of Nov. 23, on which Lord Kimberley caused Mr. Maitland, his secretary, to address a letter to the Times of the Nov. 24, which contained these words:—"Lord Kimberley desires me to say, that in mentioning to Mr. Atkins that the Bill originated with the Government of India, he had no intention of laying any particular stress on that fact."

I replied in a letter to the Times of Nov. 26, which contained these words:—"I will not venture to express any opinion as to what Lord Kimberley's intentions may have been, but as I committed to paper the entire conversation immediately after leaving his Lordship's presence, and while it was quite fresh in my memory, I am fortunately in a position to quote the exact words made use of."

Lord Kimberley replied to a certain question I took the liberty of asking, and I requested his permission to make known that reply to the working-men I represent. This his Lordship would not grant, but he said:—"You may tell the people in India that the matter now rests with the Council in India, and I wish particularly that it should be clearly understood the English Government had nothing whatever to do with the Bill which had been initiated by Lord Ripon, and I hope efforts will now be made to soothe the minds of the people and stop the agitation."

On Nov. 27, a letter was addressed to the Times by order of Lord Kimberley, in which his Lordship says:—"That he must emphatically deny that he used any such expressions as those contained in my letter published in the Times of the 26th ultimo."

As it was difficult to reconcile the statement made by Lord Kimberley in the Times of the 24th November, which admits he told me "that the Bill originated with the Government of India," with his denial of the 27th, and as I wished to avoid any further misunderstanding, and at the same time considered the public had a perfect right to know what did transpire at the interview between Lord Kimberley and myself, I addressed a letter on the 29th ultimo to the Times, in which I respectfully invited his Lordship, in fairness, both to me and the public, to state what actually did take place. Nearly a fortnight has now passed since that letter was written, and as his Lordship has not favoured the public with any particulars, I beg to submit for publication the following account of the interview which was committed to paper immediately after leaving his Lordship's presence.

I waited on his Lordship at the time appointed, and had the honour of an interview with him which lasted about an hour, during which time I made him acquainted with the views Anglo-Indians in India, and the working classes especially, held regarding the Bill, and also made known to him the disabilities under which they laboured.

I suggested to his Lordship the advisability of inserting a clause in the Ilbert Bill which would permit of a British-born subject brought before any native judge or magistrate claiming the right of trial by a magistrate or judge who was also a British born subject, and that such right should be allowed if claimed at the opening of the trial, when the defendant should be asked if he desired to claim the privilege. His Lordship said no such modification could be made as it would be altering the principle of the Bill, and further added, that a great many newspapers did not seem to fully understand the extent or nature of the modifications that had been made. It was only intended that native judges and magistrates belonging to the Covenanted Civil Service should exercise the jurisdiction, but that also those natives who had been appointed, under the Statute 33 Vic., cap. 3, to the offices of Sessions Judges and District Magistrates would exercise jurisdiction, and that Lord Northbrook's statements made at Bristol very fairly expressed the views and opinions held by the Government on the subject of the Bill. I told him that the conditions of the Bill, as modified, would be very distasteful to Anglo-Indians, because it would render the position of those who resided in the Mofussil very insecure. His Lordship said that it was considered natives had exercised civil jurisdiction satisfactorily, to which I replied that I was aware Lord Northbrook had said so, but the statement was not borne out by facts, which were against it. "Well," said his Lordship, "we think they will give satisfaction, and we believe this agitation will soon die out, and be forgotten in a year or two." I assured him that he was mistaken; the opposition would not decrease, but would grow much stronger if the Bill became law in its present form. "Then what do the Anglo-Indians mean to do?" he asked. "Agitate until it is withdrawn," I replied. "But," he said, "as we do not intend to withdraw it, what will they do when they understand that?" "I believe they will resist the operation of the law." "But that means disloyalty, rebellion." On which I told him that if the Bill became law in its present form, Anglo-Indians must suffer one way or the other. If they were passive, they would be sure to suffer injustice at the hands of hostile natives, who were even now gloating over the prospect of the power the Bill would give them, and had not hesitated to tell Europeans and Anglo-Indians of the course they would pursue to crush them when it became law; and knowing this, they would take that course which was natural to an Englishman when danger presented itself. I was sure that Europeans and Anglo-Indians were loyal, but the Government were straining that loyalty too much. I ventured to regret he had not had twenty years' experience in India; if he had he would better understand the feelings of the Anglo-Indians and the nature of the dangers they would be exposed to if the Bill passed into law. Lord Northbrook admitted trumped-up cases were common. "But," said his Lordship, "the Bill gives the right of appeal and also of transfer, if the High Court deem it necessary." In reply, I told him that these would be doubtful blessings to a working man in the Mofussil some 200 or 300 miles from any Presidency town, where the savings of a life might be swallowed up in paying lawyers' fees for his defence. Then how was he going to pay additional charges that would be required. Besides, in the case of an appeal, he might lie weeks in gaol before his appeal could be heard. I then asked him if he could not suspend the operations of the Bill until Parliament met, as I was sure that those I represented in India would accept the decision of that body, and reminded him that they had petitioned the House of Commons, and would think it unfair if no chance was afforded for a consideration of that petition. His Lordship said such a course could not be thought of, as it was entirely opposed to the constitution of the India Office. An opportunity had been afforded during the last session for a consideration of the memorial. Of course, had the prayer of the petitioners been granted, it would have amounted to a vote of censure of the Government, and they would have gone out of office; not that he was at all afraid about that, because they would have had a majority of about seventy on a division. On asking him whether some further modifications could not be made in the Bill, he said:—"It is now in the hands of the Legislative Council of India and the Government here can do nothing more in the matter." I then asked whether in the event of those aggrieved making further representations to Lord Ripon, and the Viceroy were to suggest further modifications, would they receive consideration at the hands of the Government? The reply to this question I am not permitted to make known; but his Lordship added, "You may tell the people in India that the matter now rests with the Council in India, and I wish particularly that it should be clearly understood the English Government had nothing whatever to do with the Bill which had been initiated by Lord Ripon, and I hope efforts will now be made to soothe the minds of the people and stop the agitation." I told him I would send the intelligence to India, but I would at the same time like to be able to send word that some further modifications might be looked for; he must remember there were many thousands of the working classes whose safety would be imperilled if the Bill passed in its present form, and they felt very strongly on the subject. "Oh!" said his Lordship, "there are only about 40,000," but subsequently corrected himself, and said he thought there were 68,000 British-born subjects in the country. He then went on to criticise the English papers in India that are opposed to the Bill, and said he was ashamed of them. I told him that was no concern of the working classes, which consisted of Anglo-Indians and Indo-Europeans, who considered they had not been, and were not being fairly treated. His Lordship said:—"Those classes want to have too much their own way; they are aggressive." I told him they were exactly the very reverse; privilege after privilege had been taken away from them and their children, and they were not allowed to compete on equal terms with natives (Asiatics) of the country. They had sent in petition after petition, but no consideration had been given to their appeals. I drew his attention to the memorial, bearing many thousands of signatures, and accompanied by a census of the Anglo-Indians and Indo-Europeans, sent by myself to Lord Northbrook in 1875, which had not, up to this time, received any consideration. His Lordship said:—"Yes, that is quite in accordance with the policy of this and every other Government. It is not our intention to allow the children of those classes to compete on equal terms with natives of the country. India is to be governed for the natives only."

I told him this seemed very unfair, but it was not more so than the manner in which, at the present time, when two candidates—the one a native, and the other the child of an Anglo-Indian or Indo-European—presented themselves as candidates for a vacancy in the public services, the native received the preference, though the European might be the most competent man. His Lordship said it was quite right and proper that natives should have the preference. "But," I said, "if this is to be the policy, you will make the children of those the Government has attracted to the country from time to time outcasts and paupers, and they will in all probability become a menace and a danger to the State. Could something not be done, some consideration not be displayed for their position?" His Lordship replied:—"Their position may seem hard, but the natives must be looked after; however, we may consider the subject." I said I was very glad to hear that the subject might be considered, but it would be a pleasing thing if he would enable me to tell these people in India they might hope something would be done for them. He said, "That is more than I can do. I will not hold out a hope that is not likely ever to be realised. In fact, the present Council will certainly not consider the advisability of holding out a prospect of any hope that something might be done for them." We then went back again to the Bill, and I told his Lordship that if it became law it would be likely not only to drive capital out of India, but retard the flow of it into the country, owing to the insecurity for public peace and personal safety that would be created if the Bill became law.

I drew his Lordship's attention to three concerns that were projected before the Bill was drafted, and were now in abeyance, and pointed out to him that capital was necessary for the development of India, because the natives generally would not invest their money in industrial enterprises, and if the Government did anything whatever that would check capital coming into the country for these purposes, they would be pursuing a course injurious to the natives, as they would be preventing the creation of additional industries that were required to give employment and a means of earning a livelihood to the largely increasing native population.

His Lordship said:—"Well, that could not be helped;" however, he hoped that those who were the leaders in this agitation would endeavour to restore calm again. I replied that when men had what they considered a just cause, their leaders had sometimes a difficulty in keeping them back, after which remark I was rising to leave, and had opened the door, when he desired me to close it again. I did so when he said, "Now what I am going to tell you I do not want construed into a threat, but the Government will not withdraw the Bill, whatever the people in India may do; that they are resolved upon." I replied that I was very sorry indeed to hear it; I was sure the agitation would increase, for my constituents considered the present Government were committing as grave a piece of injustice in attempting to deprive them of their rights as a former Government of over 100 years ago were guilty of in attempting to impose a tax upon tea in our American colonies. Trusting you will allow this letter to appear in your columns, I remain, yours obediently,

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

DECEIVING ENGLAND.

WITHOUT absolutely saying so, Major Baring, in his article in the Nineteenth Century, endeavours to make the people of England believe that the agitation in India against the Ilbert Bill is a Tory, and therefore a party agitation. Now, such an attempt is of a piece with the dishonesty which has marked every step of the Government in connection with this Bill. No man ought to know better than Major Baring, that nowhere in the world is the distinction of party so completely obliterated as in India. This is shown in the way in which the Liberals appeal to what may have been done by Lord Mayo to justify what was done by Lord Northbrook, and Conservatives to what was done by Lord Lawrence and Lord Northbrook to justify what was done by Lord Lytton. Even Lord Ripon, the Radical, declares that he is only in his Local Self-Government scheme carrying out what was initiated by the Tory Lord Mayo. In India measures are of necessity weighed by the way they affect the community, and there is never any possibility of referring them to this or that school. Men do not distrust the actions of the Government as politicians or as partisans; but as men who know how they will be affected by a given measure, or how such a measure will meet a want of the country, or further the interests of the natives or the purpose of the administration; criticism is thus never theoretic but always practical, and men are content to be Anglo-Indians for the simple but very effective reason that, no matter what their views of English politics may be, there is no room in the presence of an Indian question for anything but practical and purely Indian considerations. Now, how does this matter stand as regards the Ilbert Bill? Men of all shades of opinion in India have spoken against it. Mr. Justice Norris, whose politics in England are well known, has voted against the measure, yet no one in India thought of referring his vote to any party proclivities. It was understood to be an honest opinion given upon the merits of the measure; Anglo-Indians assert that the discussion of the Ilbert Bill cannot be a party question. It does not affect Liberal principles or their application to India; but it does affect the whole community of Englishmen as Englishmen. Let us see what evidence Major Baring himself has given in this matter. In March, 1882, in the course of his speech on the Budget, he gave certain figures relating to the employment of natives. Now, these figures, he tells us, show "all branches of the Public Service which are directly engaged in the Government or Administration of the country, but not such as are concerned with its moral and material development, or the rendering of service to the community on payment. Thus Police, Forests, Political, Gaols, and Registration have been included. On the other hand, Public Works, Mints, Telegraphs, Education, Survey, Post Office, and some other miscellaneous offices have been excluded." The figures are as follow:—

| Class.        | Covenanted. | Uncovenanted. | Total. |
|---------------|-------------|---------------|--------|
| Europeans ... | 861         | 1,197         | 2,058  |
| Natives ...   | 12          | 2,102         | 2,024  |
| Totals ...    | 873         | 3,299         | 4,082  |

Why Major Baring left out the departments in which the natives are largely in excess of the Europeans, we cannot say. But we suppose he meant that he has divided them into executive and administrative branches; but if so, Forests, Political, and Registration ought certainly to be classed with Education, Survey, and the Post Office. Accepting his figures, we find that Lord Ripon is legislating to satisfy the claims of twelve natives and to ignore the claims of the 2,012 natives, and 1,197 Europeans; for the Ilbert Bill, as it was first proposed, excluded uncovenanted executive officers, whether Europeans or natives, from the office of Justice of the Peace. In the form which Major Baring now represents that it has been presented to India, the Bill strictly confines itself to the twelve covenanted native officers. Since Major Baring gave those figures, one covenanted native officer has died. Of the eleven, therefore, left who might receive a right to exercise jurisdiction over Europeans under the Bill, only three are actually qualified. Two of these are in Bengal, and one in Bombay. All three are Bengalis. One is a Brahmin of a caste who have lost all claims to consideration as priests, and who are only entitled to the name of Brahmin. One is a Vaidya, or by caste a medical practitioner; and the third is a Kayastha, or writer by caste. Of the whole number two are Parsees, one is a native of Assam, one is a Mahratti Brahmin, and the rest are Bengalis. It is not easy to see how these eleven men can represent the masses of India, but of the whole population of India only these eleven men will be affected by the Bill, and of these eleven only three men will be immediately affected. Now, bearing this in mind, English readers will be able to gauge pretty accurately the statement of Major Baring in the following passage:—"There are probably a large number of natives in India who scarcely know that this Bill has ever been introduced, and who would not be affected in one way or the other were it withdrawn. There are also a very few educated natives who have advocated the withdrawal of the Bill. But I feel assured that the mass of the natives who take an intelligent interest in politics and whose number is increasing daily, would regard the withdrawal of this Bill as an outward and visible sign that the moderate views of the best Anglo-Indian statesmen, past and present, were for the future to be subordinated to those of the extreme anti-native section of the European community." "Now, here we have a gigantic untruth. Major Baring knew the truth and he placed it before the English public, so disguised as to be a source of mischief. He first gives the fact that the native of India care nothing about the powers to be conferred on two Bengalis in Bengal, and one in Bombay. He then infers a particular point which he gravely exaggerates, and then treats his inference, exaggerated as it is, as a fact within the knowledge of all men. He knows that there is no mass of natives who take an intelligent interest in politics. He knows that the small section which does take an interest in politics are so given to false representations, to disloyalty, to reckless attacks upon the administration and the officers of Government as to give rise to a Vernacular Press Act, and to make the repeal of that Act a great deal of a mistake. Major Baring knows that last autumn and last winter he himself and Lord Ripon deplored the want of intelligence shown by natives who attempt to discuss political questions. He knows that Lord Ripon sent a circular to all Local Governments, to all public bodies, and to every newspaper in India seeking for a remedy against the ignorant way in which natives discussed political questions. Further, Major Baring of all men knew thoroughly well that such papers as the Indian Spectator, the Bengali, the Amrita Bazaar Patrika, the Hindoo Patriot, and a host of others, all united in declaring that the measure in itself was absolutely nothing, but that it was everything as a proof that the Government contemplated the possibility of withdrawing from India, and leaving India to govern itself. Of the truth of Major Baring's statement, the English public may judge, when we say that he had the best means of knowing that agitation in favour of the Bill has never spread to the leaders of native society; that they have kept aloof from it in a remarkable manner; that the agitation has never extended beyond a few of the educated natives supported by the students at the Presidencies; and that those who have been loudest in support of the Bill have formed an association, not to secure its passing into law, but to bring about what they call a reform of the government of India. The only fund attempted to be raised by the natives is called the National Fund, and in five months, even with the help of big donations, this fund amounts to only Rs.6,000. It is to be expended, not in support of the Bill, but in bringing about the reform of the government of India; and to common sense this smacks a great deal more of opposition than support. Major Baring knew all this, for it took place under his eyes, so that his misstatement in the Nineteenth Century cannot escape the charge of being wilful. Like the telegram of March 9, it was meant to entrap the judgment of Englishmen.—Indian Daily News.

THE ANCIENT LAND LAW OF BENGAL.

THE object of the new Bengal Tenancy Bill, say its authors, is not to redistribute landed property, but "to restore the ancient land law of the country." This very important question has been thoroughly examined and most ably reviewed by Mr. Henry Bell in a pamphlet, the receipt of which we acknowledged last week. The first point raised is that the zemindars are not proprietors of the soil in the sense the words are understood in England. Mr. Bell thus answers this point: "It is a matter of history that when the East India Company obtained possession of Bengal in 1765, the greatest anarchy and confusion prevailed throughout the country. The central authority of the Emperor of Delhi had been shattered, and the Mohammadan Viceroy who governed in his name, having no object in view but their own aggrandisement, indulged in a general system of spoliation and pillage. It is hardly an exaggeration to say, that nearly every man of property in the country had been massacred or brought to ruin. As the great source of revenue was the land tax, it was natural that the landed proprietors or zemindars would be the chief victims in a general system of plunder. In the palmy days of Mohammadan rule the land-tax was assessed with moderation and collected without oppression. The first Mohammadan assessment of Bengal was made by Akbar, shortly after his conquest of the country, in the year 1573. The principle upon which he secured his conquest was to conciliate the Hindus and to unite them as much as possible to his person and Government. The Hindu proprietors were everywhere left in the enjoyment of their lands, subject to a quit rent which each had to pay to the Government. The tax imposed upon Bengal amounted to a little more than a million sterling; and for a period of 140 years little or no addition was made to the taxation of the country. By the moderation of his rule Akbar conciliated his subjects and consolidated his empire; agriculture was encouraged and waste lands brought into cultivation; and the zemindars lived in dignity and opulence in the undisturbed possession of their estates and the quiet employment of the profits, which an extended cultivation and an increased population produced. But with the decline of the Mogul Empire, the principles of Akbar were departed from, and from the year 1722 a system, not of government, but of pillage and robbery prevailed. Between that year and 1763 an addition of more than a million sterling was added to the land tax of Bengal. Those zemindars who were either unable to pay or unwilling to submit to these exactions were treated with a cruelty revolting to humanity. They were dispossessed of their property, thrown into prison, and subjected to every conceivable torture. One tyrant of the name of Jaffir Khan is said to have dispossessed a large number of the zemindars of Bengal, and to have appropriated the whole of the rents of their estates which he collected by his own officers, leaving to the zemindars a bare pittance scarcely sufficient for subsistence. But though subjected to these acts of tyranny and oppression, the right of the zemindars to their lands was never denied, and sooner or later they were invariably restored to their estates.

He quotes Warren Hastings to show, "That the zemindars "were the proprietors; that the lands were their estates and their inheritance; that from a long continuance of the lands in their families, it was to be concluded they have rivetted an authority in the district, acquired an ascendancy over the minds of the ryots, and ingratiated their affections."

One of the charges against Warren Hastings when he was impeached in Parliament was the following in the language of Burke:—

That "the property of the lands of Bengal was, according to the laws and customs of that country, an inheritable property and that it was with few exceptions, vested in certain natives, called zemindars or landholders, under whom other natives, called talukdars and ryots, have certain subordinate rights of property or occupancy in the said lands; that the said natives were Hindus, and that their rights and privileges were grounded upon the possession of regular grants, a long series of family succession and fair purchase; that it appeared that Bengal had been under the dominion of the Mogul and subject to a Mohammadan Government, for above two hundred years; that, while the Mogul Government was in its vigour, the property of zemindars was held sacred; and that either by voluntary grant from the said Mogul or by composition with him, the native Hindus were left in the free, quiet, and undisturbed possession of their lands, on the single condition of paying a fixed certain and unalterable revenue or quit-rent, to the Mogul Government; that this revenue or quit-rent was called the aussal jumma or original ground-rent of the provinces, and was not increased from the time it was first settled in 1573 to 1740, when the regular and effective Mogul Government ended. That notwithstanding that the right of property and inheritance had been repeatedly acknowledged by the said Warren Hastings to be in the zemindars and other native landholders; and notwithstanding that he had declared 'that the security of private property was the greatest encouragement to industry, on which the wealth of every State depended,' the said Warren Hastings, nevertheless, in direct violation of those acknowledged rights and principles, did universally let the lands of Bengal in farm for five years; thereby destroying all the rights of private property of the zemindars, thereby delivering the management of their estates to farmers, and transferring by a most arbitrary and unjust act of power the whole landed property of Bengal from the owners to strangers."

What could be a better proof than the above that the zemindars were the actual proprietors of the soil?

We turn next to the rights of ryots. Mr. Bell says: "I do not wish to be tedious, but when so astounding an assertion is made that Lord Cornwallis and his advisers left the ryots without protection and deliberately overlooked their rights, or as Mr. Ilbert says, left them outstanding, it is only fair that I should let the authors of the Permanent Settlement speak in their own defence." Sir John Shore thus wrote about rights of ryots:—

"With respect to the ryots their rights appear very uncertain and indefinite. While the demands of Government upon the zemindars were regulated by some standard as I conclude it was from the time of Akbar to that of Jaffer Khan, they had little temptation or necessity to oppress their ryots, but the same variable discretion, which has affected the payments required from them, has extended in the same manner to the ryots. The rates of the land were, probably, fixed formerly according to the nature of the soil and its produce; the cesses imposed by the zemindars were an enhancement of those rates, and arbitrary at first without being oppressive. It is, however, generally understood that the ryots by long occupancy acquire a right of possession to the soil, and are not subject to be removed; but this right does not authorise them to sell or mortgage it, and it is so far distinct from a right of property. This, like all other rights under a despotic Government, is precarious. The zemindars, when an increase has been forced upon them, have exercised the right of demanding it from the ryots. If we admit the property of the soil to be solely vested in the zemindars, we must exclude any acknowledgment of such rights in favour of the ryots, except where they may acquire it from the proprietor."

Sir John made the following remarks on rent-rates:—

"In every district throughout Bengal, where the license of exaction has not exceeded all rule, the rents of the land regulated by known rates, and in some districts each village has its own. These rates are formed with respect to the produce of the land at so much per bigha; some lands produce two crops a year, some three; the more profitable articles, such as the mulberry plant, betel leaf, tobacco and sugar-cane, render the value of the land proportionately great. These rates must have been fixed upon a measurement of the land, and the settlement of Turymul may have furnished the basis of them. In the course of time cesses were superadded to that standard, and became included on a subsequent valuation, the rates varying with each succeeding measurement."

The occupancy and non-occupancy ryots were thus described:—

"There are two other distinctions of importance with respect to the rights of the ryots. Those who cultivate the lands of the village to which they belong, either from length of occupancy or other causes, have a stronger right than others, and may, in some measure, be considered as hereditary tenants, and they generally pay the highest rents. The other class cultivate lands belonging to a village, where they do not reside; they are considered as tenants at will; and having only a temporary accidental interest in the soil, which they cultivate, will not submit to the payment of so large a rent as the preceding class, and when oppressed easily abandon the land, to which they have no attachment."

A ryot pays his rent either by a formal or implied agreement. The first is a deed called the pottah, which ought to express the nature and terms of his tenure and the amount of his rent; it often, however, refers some of the conditions to indefinite rule, such as the custom of the village or the pergunnah, the rates of an elapsed year, or the rent of his predecessor. The terms of an implied agreement are sometimes specific, as in Chittagong, where the rents are paid from year to year, according to rates established upon a measurement of the lands in the year 1767; or indefinite, as having reference to the rates of the last and preceding year, as in Nuddea. In some places, as in the northern parts of the Dacca districts, the collections are made by a measurement of the land held by each renter, immediately previous to the harvest, agreeable to which the lands are valued, and the rents received.

Leases to the khudkast ryots, or those who cultivate the land of the village where they reside, are generally given without any limitation of period, and express that they are to hold the lands, paying the rents from year to year. Hence the right of occupancy originates, and it is equally understood as a prescriptive law, that the ryots who hold by this tenure, cannot relinquish any part of the lands in their possession or change the species of cultivation without a forfeiture of the right of occupancy. Pykast ryots, or those who cultivate the land of villages, where they do not reside, hold their lands upon a more indefinite tenure. The leases to them are generally granted with a limitation in point of time, and when they deem the terms unfavourable they repair to some other spot.

Mr. Bell then shows that the rent paid by ryots was reckoned itself at half or three-fourths of the gross value of produce.

Such were the main features of the ancient land law of Bengal. If the Government wishes to be consistent, it ought to restore the statu quo ante, and if it does so neither the zemindars nor ryots will have any right to complain. The Government may well say that it is bound to enforce the old law of Bengal, and if under that law the zemindar is found to have better rights than the ryot, the Legislature of to-day cannot fairly be blamed. Mr. Bell deserves the thanks of both the Government and the zemindars for elucidating the "ancient land law of Bengal," so clearly, unmistakably and forcibly.—Hindoo Patriot.

THE "TIMES" ON THE ILBERT BILL.

WE gave on Saturday the statement made by Lord Ripon concerning the Ilbert Bill, and this morning will be found in our Calcutta telegram an account of its reception by the European population. It will be seen that the impression produced is anything but favourable. The Viceroy's explanation of the delay in making known the actual position of affairs and the intentions of the Government is rejected as inadequate; while the attempt to throw the whole initiative in Indian legislation into the hands of the Secretary of State is even more severely criticised. Lord Ripon professes himself anxious that the opinions upon the Ilbert Bill should be laid before Parliament before it is finally discussed in the Executive Council, but alleges the unwillingness of the Cabinet to agree to this course. It is true, as he observes, that the Indian Government cannot control either Her Majesty's Ministers or the House of Commons, but it ought to have control over its own order of business. If Lord Ripon has any genuine desire that this unhappy measure should be discussed in the House of Commons, he has only to postpone its further discussion in India for a couple of months. He may rely upon it that men will readily be found to bring it fully and forcibly before both Houses of Parliament. If he pleads that this course would be inconvenient for a Cabinet which has a good deal of business on hand for next Session, he justifies the retort that the proper duty of a Viceroy is to maintain the interests of India, not to make things smooth for his party at home. The telegrams which we published last week and that which appears to-day must deepen the conviction in every candid mind that Lord Ripon committed a gigantic blunder in bringing forward such a measure at all, and that he repeats it each day that he refuses frankly to withdraw the Bill. No principle, however lofty, and no argument, however plausible, can for an instant justify political action which arouses the fiercest passions in a community previously tranquil. Had the Indian populations been visibly boiling over with discontent, and India itself on the brink of a revolution, the desperate nature of the situation would have excused desperate attempts to deal with it. But no language can adequately characterise the madness which, in mere pursuit of an abstract principle for which not one per million of the people of India ever dreamt of contending, has arrayed Europeans and natives in opposite camps and brought into glaring relief the fundamental difficulties of English rule in India. Were all and a thousand times all that its most eager apologists have ever said for the Ilbert Bill to be proved with mathematical conclusiveness, it would be a mere impertinence in face of the fact that a community which was peaceful has been perturbed, that relations which were easy have been strained, and that the representative of the Queen is deserted by the best supporters of her power, and covered with interested adulation by the organs of fanaticism and disloyalty.

With this crushing and unanswerable condemnation of Lord Ripon's policy before us, we have no inclination to reargue the details of the Ilbert Bill. Opinions have differed widely about that measure, judged upon abstract principles and regarded as a development of a certain theory of government. But it is now shown with a clearness that must startle the dullest theorist to be no abstract problem in social dynamics that Lord Ripon has been working out, but a question of practical politics. Judged on that ground, the Ilbert Bill is universally condemned. Securus judicat orbis terrarum. There is a judgment finally passed upon all important questions which is not formulated in polemical utterances or based upon the issues of dialectical contests, but is silently formed by the common sense of the world. Before the judgment arguments thought irrefutable wither into insignificance, institutions which but yesterday had their eager defenders are suddenly seen to be indefensible, and changes opposed by all the resources of logic and all the power of vested interests are found to be inevitable. By that final court of appeal Lord Ripon's policy in this matter stands irrevocably condemned, and we therefore hold it idle to rehearse again the arguments already set forth in these columns and never adequately met. The last temptation to do so is removed by the fact that the Indian Government itself has practically abandoned its case. In another place will be found a letter from Dr.

W. W. Hunter, who has already appeared as the authoritative exponent and defender of Lord Ripon's policy. His ability and literary skill are well known and form a sufficient guarantee that whatever can be said for the Ilbert Bill will be said by him. Yet in the last paragraph of his letter he admits that he himself was opposed to the measure in its original form, and intimates that all he now says is to be read with reference to the modifications forced upon Lord Ripon by public opinion. But what is yet more important is the fact, which every careful reader can verify for himself, that his letter is not a justification of the Ilbert Bill in any form, but an apology for its introduction.

In a former letter Dr. Hunter argued that the Ilbert Bill was rendered necessary by declarations made half a century ago and subsequently embodied in the Queen's Proclamation when the government of India was taken out of the hands of the East India Company. We pointed out that the men who made these declarations must be taken to have known what they meant, and that the practice of themselves and their successors in the government of India furnishes the only valid interpretation of their meaning. We asked on what grounds it can be pretended that arrangements consonant with the principles of our rule for half a century are now declared to be so much at variance therewith as to justify their reversal by the Ilbert Bill. This question Dr. Hunter answers by saying that in 1882, when the revised code was under discussion, a pledge was given to the native members of Council that "the question of jurisdiction should be separately considered on its merits." But this merely shows that Lord Ripon's present policy was initiated in 1882 instead of 1883. Consideration of the question on its merits is separated by a very wide gulf from the settlement of the question in a manner conspicuous for its omissions, and this gulf Dr. Hunter does not attempt to bridge. Nor does he explain why, after the pledge was embodied in propositions which many experienced administrators in India approved, Lord Ripon expanded them into a measure which no one heartily approves and which those most directly interested unreservedly condemn. In the whole mass of official opinions on the Ilbert Bill, we question whether one can be found conveying frank and thorough approval, though there are many showing that the writer was anxious to make the best of a bad job. Dr. Hunter does not attempt to deal with this great body of hostile opinion, but tries to show that certain persons approve the principle of the Bill. Approval of an abstract principle goes a very little way in this world, else statesmen and soldiers would find their occupation gone. We are not concerned in the very least with what men thought of a principle or with what they thought even of Lord Ripon's proposals a year ago. The only important thing is what they think of the actual Ilbert Bill, and what they think of it to-day. One Lieutenant Governor of Bengal actually in office and confronted with concrete propositions outweighs, not five, but five hundred, former occupants of the post who dealt only with an unembodied idea. Dr. Hunter sets against the opinions of Mr. Justice Stephen those of other Law Members of the Council. What their opinions were upon a vaguely presented principle we do not care to inquire, but we can assure Dr. Hunter that his list would have to be notably reduced where we go upon their present opinions concerning the Ilbert Bill itself. But really it is playing with the subject to collect a few individual opinion some given upon a totally different case, and others, as a reference to the printed documents will show, given with the most important reserves and qualifications, when we have to deal with such a universal condemnation of the actual measure as now exists. Lord Northbrook's speech at Bristol certainly conveyed the impression that the modifications to be made in the Bill exclude statutory civilians from exercising criminal jurisdiction over Englishmen. It has since been affirmed that this is a mistake, and in that case we can readily understand the continued demand for unconditional withdrawal. Dr. Hunter deprecates the creation of a legislative distinction between covenanted native civilians appointed after an English training and competitive examination and statutory civilians appointed in India without any such training. But the distinction exists in fact, it is one of the most important that can be conceived in relation to the question of jurisdiction, and no legislation that ignores it can be sound or workable. When distinctions are talked of, Englishmen who qualify themselves by a costly and exhausting education may well ask why any native whose local influence can procure him an appointment is to be placed at once in the position they have striven so hard to attain.

THE AGITATION AGAINST THE "ILBERT BILL NO. II."—(THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.)

A MEETING of the Central Committee of the Landholders of Bengal and Behar was held on Saturday, Nov. 17, at the Town Hall, "for the purpose of taking further steps to have the hasty legislation in connection with the Bengal land system reconsidered." The meeting was attended by a large number of European and native gentlemen not connected with the committee, who came to give the proceedings their support. Dr. Rajendralalla Mitter took the chair.

The meeting was addressed by the chairman and the Maharaja Jotindro Mohun Tagore at considerable length. The latter proposed that the committee should submit a memorial to his Excellency the Viceroy with reference to the official opinions upon the Bengal Tenancy Bill, published in the Gazette of India of Oct. 20, 1883.

Narandra Krishna and Baboo Joykissen Mookerjee supported the resolution, which was carried unanimously.

Peary Mohun Mookerjee next introduced and proposed the second resolution, that the memorial be submitted to the Secretary of State with reference to the despatch of the Government of India, upon which his sanction to the Bill was accorded, praying that he will direct that no further proceedings in the matter of the Bill shall be taken until he has had the opportunity of reconsidering his determination with reference to the facts stated in the memorial; further, that a memorial be presented to the Viceroy, praying that the Bill be postponed till orders from the Secretary of State on the above memorial be received.

Mr. Keswick seconded the resolution. He said that he would not believe that Government in the face of the weighty reasons put forward against the Bill would persist in proceeding with it in its present form. Its one-sidedness had been clearly shown, not by landlords only, but by almost all the experienced Government officials consulted. He agreed with the Lieutenant Governor as to the desirability of peasant proprietorship as to giving the ryot a greater incentive to improve the land, but if those who had inherited the land or purchased it were to be deprived of their proprietary rights in favour of the ryot, surely some compensation should be made. The speaker then quoted the opinions expressed in Mr. Bell's pamphlet, and the statement made by Sir Ashley Eden and others, to the effect that the ryots of Bengal are in a prosperous condition and know their legal rights. He also coincided in the opinion of Mr. Munro that a stringent law to prevent illegal cesses would do much more good than this revolutionary one, that would rob the zemindar to give to the ryot what he never asked for, and had no right to. He then remarked that it was unfortunate that some of the officials connected with the preparation of this Bill were Irishmen known to be anti-landlords. He had the greatest respect for their honour and ability, but the fact of their holding these views made them feel that it would have been better if they had not been consulted. Let them do the utmost they could constitutionally to prevent this Bill being passed. It would cause much litigation between zemindars and their ryots. Mr. Ilbert admitted this, but said that no doubt the Government of the day would be able to deal with it.

Messrs. Bell and Hill supported the resolution which was carried unanimously.

The Pioneer says:—"Even its most enthusiastic supporters, if such there be, have begun to despair of passing the Bengal Rent Bill this cold weather. The debates in Select Committee are said to be interminable, the opponents of the measure having apparently taken a lesson in obstruction from the irreconcilables in Parliament. There is, besides, every probability that such extensive alterations will be made in the Bill that it will have to be republished, a proceeding which will shelve the measure for several months."

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Bombay Gazette, Nov. 23.)

Major General H.R.H. the Duke of Connaught, who is about to take over command of the Meerut Division, arrived at Bombay, accompanied by the Duchess of Connaught, on Nov. 21. Their Royal Highnesses leave for Meerut on the 24th. The Commander in Chief of the Madras Army (Sir Frederick Roberts) was at Trevandrum on the 9th inst.

General Hardinge, Commander in Chief of the Bombay Army, will leave Bombay on Nov. 28, for his proposed tour in the Southern Mahratta Country. His Excellency will visit Dharwar, Belgaum, Kolhapur, and Satara, and return to Poona on Dec. 26.

Major General Sir H. Macpherson left Allahabad on Nov. 21 on a visit of inspection to Benares and Dinapore.

Brigadier General Oldershaw, C.B., returned to Kurrachee on the 9th inst., from Europe and resumed command of the district from Brigadier General Smart, who left for Bombay on the 13th.

Major General John Fulton, Royal (late Bengal) Artillery, has retired from the service on a pension of £1,000 per annum, and proceeds to New Zealand from Calcutta.

The services of Lieut. Col. A. C. Toker, Bengal Staff Corps, have been replaced at the disposal of the Commander in Chief, and has rejoined his regiment at Dinapore.

Col. A. Carnegie, and Col. W. R. Houghton, Bombay Staff Corps, are promoted to Major General.

Should Lieut. Col. C. R. Pennington not be provided for elsewhere, he will, the Allahabad paper says, succeed to the officiating appointment of Commandant, 13th Bengal Lancers on the departure of Lieut. Col. Macnaghten on the two years' furlough recently granted him. Colonel Pennington's position in the regiment is peculiar, he having not only been eight years longer in it, but has nine months more service than the present commandant. Colonel Macnaghten's brevet, however, dates six weeks earlier than Colonel Pennington's. The former belongs to the local cavalry but has accepted staff corps rules as regards promotion; the latter, however, joined the Staff Corps on its formation in 1861.

On the return to duty of Lieutenant Colonel C. W. Campbell, Bengal Staff Corps, Commandant 2nd Bengal Cavalry, Lieutenant Colonel F. Knowles, now in command, intends proceeding to England on furlough for one year.

Orders for the camp of exercise at Umballa have been issued.

Colonel Harvey, K.O.B., commands the 1st, and Lieutenant Colonel Channer, V.C., 3rd Pioneers, the 2nd Infantry Brigade. Both brigades are weak, each consisting of two battalions only. Lieutenant Colonel Bushman, C.B., commands the Cavalry Brigade.

On the recommendation of a medical board general leave of absence, from 25th October to 22nd January next, is granted to Major R. A. Crawford, 1st Battalion Durham Light Infantry.

Lieut. Colonel (Brevet Colonel) John Roberts, Bengal Staff Corps, is about to retire from the service.

Major Whitehead, 1st South Lancashire, and Colonel Farrington, South Yorkshire, have been granted extensions of leave in England until the 15th December and 15th January next, respectively.

Captain H. E. Penton, 7th Bo. N. I., goes home to join the Staff College.

Captain F. Stevenson, 19th Bombay N.I., who was lately on special duty in the Military Department, Government of India, is likely to be appointed Officiating Station Staff Officer at Neemuch, and he will probably be confirmed in the appointment when Major Spratt's tenure has expired.

Captain E. V. P. Monteith, 2nd Sind Horse, is allowed furlough to Europe for one year.

Lieut. Bouchier, Scottish Rifles, is posted to the 2nd Battalion.

Lieut. Brett, 2nd Liverpool Regiment, has been appointed to the 4th Madras Cavalry as a Staff Corps probationer.

Lieut. J. E. Harvey, R.A., proceeds from Allahabad to Secunderabad, and joins D Battery, 1st Brigade, into which he has been transferred.

Lieut. P. A. Clague, Rangoon Volunteers, has been attached for duty to E Company, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles.

Lieut. D. J. Paterson, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, has sent in his resignation.

Lieut. A. Clark, 3rd Punjab Volunteer Rifle Corps, has been granted leave to England for twelve months, from date of departure.

Under instructions from the War Office the following paymasters are directed to proceed to England:—Major E. E. Coote and R. M. J. Nott, and Captain J. S. Brereton.

Several officers of the Bombay General List having lately petitioned to be placed under the same scale of pensions as officers of the local service, the Secretary of State has intimated his inability to comply with the request.

The military authorities have ruled that the half-yearly examinations by the higher standard in Persian can be held at any military station, where a qualified board can be assembled, instead of only at Peshawur, Lahore, and Allahabad.

Surgeon Major E. C. Markey, A.M.D., on leave in England, has been detailed for duty at Woolwich, and will be struck off the strength of the Bengal command.

The following transfers have been made:—Lieuts. Rich, Lincolnshire; Vans Agnew, South Lancashire; and Wynnam, East Lancashire, to the 1st Battalions of their regiments, and Lieuts. Armstrong, Lincolnshire; Elrington, Dorsetshire; and Showers, Norfolk, to the 2nd Battalions.

The 7th Bengal Infantry arrived at Morar on Nov. 5, at which station it will remain until further orders.

The King's Own Borderers, 1st Battalion, marched from Dugshai on the 12th November, en route for Umballa, where it will remain for the drill season.

The guard of honour of 100 rank and file from the 10th Bombay Native Infantry drawn up at the Apollo Bunder on the occasion of H. E. the Governor's arrival was a very fine looking body of men. Not a man was under five feet nine inches, and nearly all had one, and some two medals. Of the three native officers, all very tall men, nearly six feet each in height, one had three medals and the order of merit, and the remainder, two medals each. Should the Duke of Connaught during his stay in Bombay, wish to see a native regiment of the Bombay Army, there are few which in physical appearance can compare with the 10th Native Infantry.

Surgeon G. A. Emerson, Indian Medical Department, in medical charge of the 17th, the Loyal Poorbeah Regiment, has proceeded on furlough for one year to England.

It has been definitely decided that the Commissariat Department shall undertake the duty of receiving, shipping, landing, and distributing stores of all kinds, and for all departments, on occasions of future equipment and despatch of expeditions beyond sea.

The Government of India have ruled that men of the Army Hospital Native Corps are not entitled to receive war medals, but that any specially deserving case may be submitted for consideration on its own merits.

The Chief Court of the Punjab has found it necessary to issue the following circular:—

"A case has recently been brought to the notice of the judges in which a Criminal Court issued a summons for the appearance of a soldier in military employ, and did not send it for service to the soldier's commanding officer. The judges accordingly invite the attention of the Criminal Courts subordinate to them to the provisions of Section 72 of the Criminal Procedure Code, which are wide enough to include persons in military employ, and request that, whenever it is necessary to summon an officer, or soldier, or other person in military employ the summons may always be sent for service to the commanding officer of the person to be served, unless there are special reasons, which should be recorded, for proceeding otherwise."

The Indian Government sailing ship Czarwitch, Captain Hotham, arrived in harbour on Nov. 21, in tow of the I. G. S. Dagmar, from Vingorla, which port she left on the 19th instant, with details of British regiments. She will sail to-day for Kurrachee, in tow of the Dagmar, with details of British regiments consisting of three European men, one native officer, fifty-five native men, one woman, two children, and three followers.

The 2nd Regiment Punjab Cavalry, under the command of Lieut. Colonel F. Lance, marched from Dera Ghazi Khan on the 12th November, en route for Dera Ismael Khan, where the corps is to be quartered.

The 29th Regiment Punjab Native Infantry, under the command of Major V. W. Tragear, will march from Agra for the camp of exercise at Meerut on Nov. 19, reaching that station about Dec. 1, where it will remain for December and January.

The 1st Battalion South Yorkshire Regiment leaves Bareilly by route march to Dinapore on Nov. 21, halting at Fategunge, Shajehanpore, Sitapore, Nawabgunge, Faizabad, Jaunpore, Benares, Saidpore, Buxar, and Keolwur, and arriving at Dinapore on Jan. 12 next.

There was a great falling off in the attendance of the Calcutta Volunteers at parade on the 14th inst., the A Company having only a few men. The Naval Company appeared in their uniform, and looked very well. Though the company has 110 names on paper, it is very doubtful if more than forty to fifty make themselves efficient.

The "Bengal Army List" for the first quarter of 1884, the Pioneer says, will be much improved in appearance and reduced in size. The type for the current "Army List," which has been kept standing for the past quarter of a century, will be replaced by new type cast in India. "We would take this opportunity of pointing out to Major Colleen, to whom we believe the credit is due of trying to improve the "Army List," that its efficiency would not be impaired by the omission of all Volunteer corps located in Burma, Mysore, and the Central Provinces, who are under the military administration of the Madras Presidency; staff appointments and salaries which are given in the Pay Code; the Bengal Military Orphan Fund, Bengal Medical Retiring Fund, Indian Service Family Pensions, and the Furlough Regulations, as it is only a waste of public money producing them quarterly, when they already exist in other publications. We would like to see one "Imperial Army List of all India."

SERIOUS CHARGE.—We hear that a sergeant of the 2nd Battalion Derbyshire Regiment is about to be arraigned before a district court-martial on charges of a somewhat serious character. At this stage, we refrain from mentioning either the name of the impeached non-commissioned officer or the nature of the indictment.—Lucknow Express.

THE STAFF CORPS ACCELERATED PROMOTION FUND.

THE following notice has been sent to all Members of Parliament of both parties:—"Amid all the clamour of army reformers the Indian Army very seldom finds a prominent place, and it is only by agitation, which in itself is far from desirable, that those whose lot is cast in that service ever get their grievances properly attended to. The subject of pension and retirement regulations was brought prominently forward a couple of years ago, with the result that a most disgraceful state of affairs was exposed, and a speedy remedy had to be adopted, which, though far from complete, has done a reasonable amount of justice. Another complaint of great importance has now come to the front, and that is on the question of promotion in the Staff Corps and Indian Army. It is a fact that under the present rules a lieutenant is not promoted till after twelve years' service, and a captain does not develop into a major till after twenty years—a period at which he would, if in a British regiment, be superannuated. A major is not promoted to the rank of colonel till after twenty-six years. As against this, a cavalry subaltern in a British regiment gets a troop in about seven years, while the infantry subaltern is promoted, on the average, in nine years. There is no sort of reason for this glaring anomaly; indeed, the advantage, if any, ought to be on the side of those who have to serve out of England, and in an unhealthy country. A further injustice is done to the sub-lieutenants in India, by which many of them are deprived of one or even two years' service and it is intended to bring the whole subject before Parliament and the country in every legal way. The security of India depends on the existence of an efficient and contented army, and the sooner the powers that be look to this matter, with a view to remedying it, the better it will be in the interest of the nation. The headquarters of the movement are at 22, Grosvenor Mansions, Westminster."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

THE MARQUIS OF LORNE AS OUR FUTURE VICEROY.

LORD LORNE's address, delivered at the Colonial Institute, on Tuesday evening last, on "Our Relations with the Colonies," will be read with delight, and even with enthusiasm, by every patriotic Colonist and Anglo-Indian. And to all those, here at home in England, who put the interests of our beloved nationality and our glorious Empire above the paltry interests of party, and are strong enough to despise the clamour of Brummagem caucus-mongers and Radical place-hunters, it will be felt to be a matter for the warmest congratulation that Britain still has among her loyal sons, men like Lord Lorne and Lord Dufferin—men who, although their political lot happens to have been cast by birth among those who habitually revile the pioneers of our Anglo-Saxon race in India and the Colonies, are not afraid to step out from their party on questions of real Imperial import. Lord Lorne's address on Tuesday, like Lord Dufferin's on a somewhat similar occasion last year at the Empire Club, has the true Imperial ring in every sentence. His demand for consideration and justice for the feelings and wishes of Colonists might well be pondered by those Radicals, who are now so bitterly attacking the dearest rights and privileges of Englishmen in India, under the pretence of pleasing some half-dozen Native Judges. Even in matters of "sentiment," Lord Lorne shows that he has learnt how large is the share that is borne by "sentiment" in the wise direction of human affairs; and every Anglo-Indian, as well as millions of Colonists, will heartily support his Lordship's proposal that the names of Canada and Australia should be borne in the Royal and Imperial title of our Gracious Sovereign. To some it will seem like the irony of fate that the son and heir of the Duke of Argyll should be the man to propose the logical development of Lord Beaconsfield's Imperial Titles Act; but, on the other hand, it should be remembered that, though the Duke did oppose Lord Beaconsfield on this question, yet it was proved beyond doubt that His Grace had himself been the first, some years before, when Secretary of State, officially to style Her Majesty "Empress of India."

Lord Lorne's name has often been mentioned for the Viceroyalty of India, whenever the dark and evil reign of the present Viceroy shall have come to an end. The appointment of the husband of the gracious Princess would at all times have been a popular one, among both Natives and Anglo-Indians, whether made by a Liberal or by a Conservative Government. But, after this Colonial Institute speech, we have no hesitation in saying that Lord Lorne would be received in India with acclamations, for his own sake, not less than for that of the Royal lady who is his wife.

LORD RIPON'S ADVOCATES IN THE NATIVE PRESS.

THE Calcutta Amrita Bazar Patrika, of Nov. 8, has an appreciative article on Sir E. Baring's recent defence of Lord Ripon's policy. It concludes thus:—

"Sir E. Baring only tells the bare truth when he says that the policy will materially increase the hold of the Government on the attachment and loyalty of the people and that at no former time have the natives of India been more attached to British rule, or more loyal to the Crown than they are at present."

This certificate ought to be very gratifying to Lord Ripon and Sir E. Baring. Its precise value may be estimated by two or three extracts from the other leading articles in the same issue of the Patrika. The attachment "to British rule" does not seem to be very conspicuous in the following passage, which occurs in the first article:—

"The despotic Government introduced by the British has no parallel in the annals of the world. It is not so violent as that introduced by the Mussulmans, but it is more pervading, and more corroding in its effects."

And even the policy of Lord Ripon itself, when directed towards other objects than that of humiliating Englishmen, does not seem to meet with such warm approval as one might have expected; for the same leading article thus glances at Mr. Ilbert's Bengal Tenancy Bill:—

"Now as to confiscation of property, it is true that, the Bengal Zemindars have their land, but in other parts of India the Government has deprived all classes of landlords of their property. The indigenous manufactures have been destroyed, and almost the entire body of our artisans have been forced to take to the plough, or turn pedlars dealing in British manufactures."

But there appears to be hope yet for the Amrita Bazar Patrika, for the leader writer continues:—

"So long the British have to depend upon Indian soldiers for the protection of their Indian Empire, it is mere rhetoric to say that India is absolutely at the mercy of the British Government."

The second article in the same issue of the Amrita Bazar Patrika is devoted to "checking the spirit of ascendancy"—as Mr. Gladstone has it—of Sir Lepel Griffin and the Political Department of the Government of India. So we can hardly be surprised if this Department is described in the following terms, scarcely compatible with the love expressed for Lord Ripon:—

"Let us first see what a political is, generally speaking, like. In his 'early life' he comes to this country to earn his livelihood. His father is, no doubt, a respectable and useful member of society. Perhaps his father manufactured the best boots in the West-end, or his uncle grew the finest potatoes in Perthshire. In India, the son of the potato-grower—we mean no disrespect—finds himself raised to an awful position. He comes here and finds himself gradually in the position of, not rulers of men like our officials, but the rulers of Kings. Is he not 'surrounded by parasites and flatterers' calculated 'to enfeeble the intellect?' Colonel Phayre is a proof."

But later on in the same article it is made clear that it is not political only who have no part or lot in the affection felt for Lord Ripon. For the writer continues:—

"The British Government is alien in India and this is a disadvantage which Sir Lepel Griffin is obliged to admit. And then he justifies it by the eminently fair statement that, if the British Government is alien in India, so is Nizam's Government alien in Hyderabad, and Scindia's in Gwalior. By aliens is meant those who live in a foreign country. The Mussulmans who live in India are not aliens. Englishmen, will also cease to be aliens when they live in this country and call India their home. But now they are birds of passage who come to India to rob it of its wealth."

Now, we ask our readers in sober earnest, is it credible that Lord Ripon can encourage the dissemination of such perilous stuff as this, side by side with fulsome eulogies on himself and his policy? Is it credible that the high-minded, patriotic, and experienced administrators who surround the Viceroy have not warned him of the danger of allowing sedition to be circulated under the protection of articles in praise of himself? Cannot Lord Ripon see that the extracts we have given above are quite sufficient to show that, in a section of the Native community—thank God, a very small and insignificant section, as yet—it is only a merely personal Viceroy that is praised and flattered, whilst the very essence of Viceroyalty, as representing the English name and the English rule, is venomously bespattered with abuse? When Sir George Campbell was in India, he had the courage to tell Lord Northbrook that such pernicious doctrine, when circulated in Upper India and in the Native States, becomes dangerous to the Empire. Has all courage, as well as all patriotism, been driven out of the Viceregal Council by the fashionable Radicalism?

ENGLISH RACE FEELING IN INDIA.

As a good deal has been lately said about the race-feeling of the English in India, short answers are here proposed to the questions:—

- (1.) What is it?
- (2.) What good does it do?
- (3.) What harm does it do?
- (4.) What is it to be dealt with?

I. What is it?

(a) Love—of country, kindred, religion, manners, customs, language, and all institutions which have made the race what it is, and of the English race itself.

(b) Faith in the superiority and greatness of the race and nation and institutions, and in the goodness of the distinctive English character.

(c) Hope in the future of the race, and that every Englishman will prove worthy of, and help to exalt the English character.

The race feeling of the English does not shut out from their hearts love for other races, or even admiration of their good qualities, any more than family affection, shuts out of a man's heart love for his neighbour. It rather helps than hinders such feelings.

II. What good does it do? It spurs men on to be worthy of their race. It is a wider application of the old maxim "Noblesse oblige." It holds up for imitation and emulation such a character as that of Tom Bowling, Philip Sydney, and hundreds of examples besides—brave, kindly, true, unselfish, modest, strong. When a ship goes down, the captain remembers he is an Englishman, and gives up his life for his duty. When there is danger on the field, the Englishman thinks of his race, and plucks up heart to struggle on and endure. When he is far from all his friends, in the midst of difficulties, dangers, and temptations, his race shames him out of much meanness, vileness, and wickedness, and nerves him to stand when he would fall, to toil when he would sleep, and to struggle when he would despair. What a force for good is this race feeling, which follows every Englishman to the ends of the earth, ever seeking to draw him upwards and onwards!

III. What harm does it do? The fashion has arisen of denouncing it. It is doubtful what is in the minds of those who denounce it, and whether race feeling in Englishmen does not get the credit of those shortcomings which are common to all human nature, and, on the other hand, human nature the credit of many of the improvements in itself brought about by this same race feeling. What are its faults?

It makes men arrogant. Faith, of course, implies a contempt for what is not consistent with that faith, if one thinks of comparing them. But does not the race feeling of Englishmen, by causing them to have a different estimate of the English character to that of others, correct that? The Englishman is measured by a different standard from other men, and more is expected from him. He is usually compared not with men of other races, but with those of his own race. His charity and sense of fairness demand of him that he do not exact from those who have not his advantages qualities which are expected of him as a matter of course. The greatest evil of the Ilbert Bill has been that it has compelled Englishmen to measure natives of India by their English standard; to think of and speak about differences which had not occurred to them before, and to proclaim their contempt for native institutions rather than their faith (which is the same thing put differently) in their own.

It makes men narrow-minded. All human nature is narrow-minded. All faith narrows the mind, for faith in one thing implies rejection of others. Does English race-feeling widen or narrow the mind? The religion of England teaches that all men are brethren—no man is common or unclean. The race of Englishmen has come in contact in a friendly spirit with all mankind. Family affection does not mar a patriot, and patriotism does not destroy love of humanity. These feelings react on and intensify one another. It is not the Englishman that has cast-off friends, family, and country who does the most for the human race.

It causes failure of justice. The stock case quoted to prove this is that of Lord Elgin, who incurred odium by refusing to prevent the execution of a European convicted of murder. Now, setting aside the theory (quite a possible one) that the strong feeling was owing to a belief in the injustice of the sentence, what do we find? The man was committed by a European magistrate, tried and convicted by a European jury, sentenced by a European judge, and executed by order of a European governor. Take it that the feeling was furious and unjust, they one and all did their duty, unmoved by it. A sense of duty is, perhaps, the highest virtue of the English character, and in that sense of duty they were not wanting. It is not by the prompting of the English race feeling that failures of justice occur, but through defiance of it, or through its absence. If English race feelings lead English men astray, what other race or class of men is to claim the confidence of Englishmen?

IV. How is it to be dealt with?

First we must bear in mind that this English race feeling is a fact. It exists, and cannot be destroyed. A British Government may persuade Britons in India that it does not share their faith, love, and hope; but by doing so it cannot destroy these feelings. It can only destroy their faith in itself, their love for itself, and their hope from itself.

On the other hand, a British Government in India will hardly even now venture to proclaim that such faith, love, and hope as Englishmen have towards their race and institutions are felt by itself towards native institutions and races. It cannot do so, for it does not find such feelings in natives themselves; and besides, it must have convictions of its own.

Without going into the whole question of the Ilbert Bill, it is only necessary here to note one of the arguments used by certain supporters of the Bill in this country, that British race-feeling in India is a bad thing, and must be destroyed. That is—that British faith in the British race and institutions does harm, and not good. What is it they want? That the English character should be destroyed? That it should remain, and not be trusted or loved?

Is it their wish that the faith of Englishmen in the English character should be destroyed, or that it should be extended to others who are not English? Surely not the former; and yet, if the latter, this is a strange way of winning our confidence for others, to prove that all we believe in most is unworthy of trust.

MAIL NEWS.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived at Bombay in the P. & O. steamer Cathay on Wednesday afternoon, Nov. 21.

On landing at the Government Dockyard their Royal Highnesses were received by the Governor of Bombay (Sir J. Fergusson), the Commander in Chief (Lieutenant General the Hon. A. E. Hardinge) and other high officers.

A choir of native school children, principally little Parsee girls, sang the vernacular version of "God save the Queen," after which Mr. Raghunath Narayan Khote, chairman of the Municipal Corporation, read an address of welcome. The Duke of Connaught having replied, a Parsee lady, Mrs. Cowasjee Jehangeer Readymoney, came forward to place garlands round the necks of their Royal Highnesses.

The Royal party then left for Government House, Parel. The streets through which the procession passed were thronged with spectators, who loudly cheered their Royal Highnesses.

On the afternoon of the 22nd Nov. his Royal Highness laid the foundation-stone of the Cama Obstetric Hospital.

It was originally intended that the ceremony should be performed with Masonic honours, but in consequence of an unfortunate misunderstanding this portion of the programme was omitted at the last moment.

The reception throughout was most enthusiastic, and it is stated that the crowds on the line of route were larger even than when the Prince of Wales visited Bombay.

Meetings are being held in Calcutta to protest against the proposed compromise of the Ilbert Bill.

The public rejoicings took place on Nov. 22, and included a grand native fair on the maidan and a magnificent display of fireworks. The illuminations were on a lavish scale.

An evening party was given at Government House, Parel, on Nov. 22, in honour of the Duke and Duchess, and the next night there will be a grand ball at the same place.

Their Royal Highnesses leave Bombay for Meerut to-morrow afternoon, travelling by the B. B. & C. I. and Rajputana-Malwa Railways.

An influential committee has been formed at Calcutta to organise a public reception in that city on the occasion of the visit of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught. Their Royal Highnesses was to attend the opening ceremony of the Exhibition on the 4th December.

The Governor of Bombay held his annual levée at the Secretariat on Monday, Nov. 19. There was a large attendance, but the whole of the Judges of the High Courts stayed away in consequence of the refusal of his Excellency to assign their old position at the levée. The affair has excited a great deal of comment, and the public generally support the action taken by the Judges, although they acquit Sir James Fergusson of any desire to treat the judicial body with disrespect.

The Governor's dinner party in honour of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught included the Chief Justice and all the Judges of the High Court.

We publish elsewhere the correspondence that has passed between the Judges and the Governor.

At a meeting of the Central Committee of the Landholders of Bengal and Behar at Calcutta on Saturday it was unanimously decided to ask the Secretary of State for India to direct that no further proceedings in the matter of the Bengal Tenancy Bill shall be taken until he has had an opportunity of reconsidering his determination with reference to the facts stated in a memorial to be represented to him.

Mr. J. Seymour Keay has written a long letter to the Viceroy urging certain objections to the carrying out of the Hyderabad Railway scheme.

Rear Admiral Sir William Hewett, Naval Commander-in-Chief, arrived in Bombay in his flagship the Euryalus on Saturday to take part in the reception of the Duke of Connaught. The Euryalus was to sail for Calcutta on the 30th Nov.

Sir A. Lyal returned to Allahabad on Nov. 22 for the season. The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal has returned from his trip to the Sandheads thoroughly restored to health.

Sir Arthur Gordon, the new Governor of Ceylon, was expected to arrive at Colombo on Dec. 1.

Mr. Ameer Ali, barrister-at-law, has been appointed a member of the Viceroyal Legislative Council in the place of Mr. Syed Ahmed, whose term of office has expired.

M. Jules Joubert delivered a lecture before the Bethune Society at Calcutta on Nov. 14, on exhibitions.

It is reported that a satisfactory understanding has been arrived at between the management of the Calcutta Exhibition and the Australian representatives, who protested against being charged for space for the Colonial exhibits.

General Kennedy, commanding the Takht-i-Suliman Survey Expedition, telegraphs through Dera Ismail Khan:—"Gunderakach, Nov. 19. Force is two marches across the frontier."

Colonel L'Estrange Commanding the Royal Artillery of the Hyderabad Subsidiary Force, has met with an accident at a panther hunt.

Five cases of cholera have occurred among the men of the South Wales Borderers. There had not been a single death from cholera in Bombay during the fortnight preceding the departure of the mail.

Mr. Cameron, the war correspondent of the Standard, has arrived in Bombay from Tonquin en route for London.

The Eurasian and Anglo-Indian Association have resolved to affiliate themselves to the Defence Association, which was started in connection with the Ilbert Bill agitation.

Mr. Wallace's application to the High Court against the Madras Times has failed.

The National Mahomedan Association, of which Mr. Ameer Ali, barrister, is the leading spirit, has sent a memorial to the Secretary of State, praying that Lord Ripon's term of office may be extended. The Calcutta correspondent of the Times of India says that it is an open secret that the memorial does not represent the unanimous views of the association.

The Imperial troopship Jumna sailed for England on Wednesday, Nov. 21, with troops.

THE GATE OF INDIA.

The city of Herat has long been recognised throughout the East as the gate of India, its geographical position being such that it is there all the routes coming from the West must necessarily converge. India is protected on the north by the great range of the Himalaya, which, issuing from the mountains of China, runs westward into Afghanistan, and, turning southward at the Hindoo Koosh, is broken up into the inaccessible ranges of the Parapomus. These mountains extend southward a little beyond the latitude of Herat, and are succeeded by a level belt of fertile country, extending westward into Persia, and eastward to Candahar, affording easy means of access to the plains of India. To the south and west of this narrow belt, inhospitable deserts extend all the way to the Indian Ocean and Persian Gulf, so that the fertile valley in which Herat lies, constitutes the only feasible route by which India can be approached from Persia, from Asia Minor, or from Europe, whether for purposes of peace or war. The invaders of India, Semiramis, Nebuchadnezzar, Alexander the Great, Ghengis Khan, Nadir Shah, and many others, entered by this route, and in 1837, and again in 1855, the acquisition of the city by Persia, under Russian instigation, was only prevented by the resolute attitude of England—resulting in the latter case in war with Persia, when the city which had been captured was given up. It has long been foreseen that a line connecting the railways of the East with those of Europe, must one day be constructed, and that this line must pass through Herat, while it has been equally obvious that, if Russia had meanwhile gained possession of this natural gate, we should find ourselves in the condition of the man who was unable to enter his own house, from the hall-door being forcibly shut in his face. The construction of this great junction line—long ago projected by Sir Macdonald Stephenson, the well-known pioneer of railways in the East—is now about to be undertaken by him. The East Indian line, which was projected and constructed by him, and which has proved to be a great success, both in a structural and financial sense, has a capital of twenty millions, which is a larger capital than will be required for the new undertaking, though it is of greater length. Before fixing the route, Sir Macdonald Stephenson had the merits of all the possible alternative routes carefully examined, so that the best might be selected. This work has constituted the labour of many years. But the result has been to create a confidence in the soundness of the undertaking as a commercial enterprise, such as could not otherwise have been commanded. A revenue approaching that of the East Indian line will, it is expected be got from the local traffic alone, while the through traffic, it is believed, will be large when the whole of the railways of India and the whole of the railways of Europe are made the reciprocal collectors and distributors for one another. Mr. Bourne, the Principal of the new Engineering College at Muswell Hill, who, under Sir Macdonald Stephenson's direction, made the estimates of cost and traffic for the East Indian line, has also, under the same direction, made the corresponding estimates for the junction line, and just as his anticipations of profit have been exceeded by the reality in the one case, so it may be expected they will be similarly exceeded in the other.

KANGRA VALLEY*INDIAN TEA GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,

7, NEW COVENTRY-STREET,
LEICESTER-SQUARE.

The object of the Planters who have formed this Association is to establish a business for the direct supply of Tea from the Plantations of the Kangra Valley to the Public.

The distinctive feature of the business of this Association is, that the Tea is delivered to consumers in the original One-lb. tin foil lined parcels in which it is packed in the Valley, and it is guaranteed to be Absolutely Pure. There are three qualities, retailing respectively at 4s., 3s., and 2s. 6d.

The Association hopes that it may, without presumption, safely recommend this Tea to the Public, believing that it will continue to give the greatest satisfaction.

The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat, which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease. His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their 'British rulers.'"—Daily Telegraph."The book is clever throughout."—Academy.

CHOLERA.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescribe and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

COUGHS, COLDs, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. — Dr. J. O. BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff) DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLORODYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE INVENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr. Browne's Chlorodyne must be false. This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE. — Vice-Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to. See The Times, July 13th, 1884.

DIARRHOEA, DYSENTERY. GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH, London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient. Dr. GIBBON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETELY CURED ME OF DIARRHOEA." From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla, Jan. 5, 1880. To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR Sir.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other brands, we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE in Diarrhoea, and Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Cholera, Diarrhoea, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, 33 St. Russell St., W.C.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is the TRUE PALLIATIVE in NEURALGIA, GOUT, CANCER, TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM. DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep, WITHOUT HEADACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC, PALPITATION, HYSTERIA. IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRUPULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists. 1s. 1½d. 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d. SOLE MANUFACTURER.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX- PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; and that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally be practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THURSDAY, DECEMBER 20, 1883.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

Our advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Nov. 30; Madras and Allahabad, Nov. 28; Calcutta, Nov. 27:

THE compromise of the Ilbert Bill now proposed by the Statesman of Calcutta, whether adopted by this Government or not—the suggestion has already appeared in these columns, in those of the Indian Daily News and elsewhere, and is so thoroughly Liberal that the chances are Lord Ripon will not accept it, as not avenging him sufficiently of his adversaries—ought at once to put an end to that miserable friction between Englishmen and Natives, which has been so recklessly promoted by the Viceroy. For the Statesman proposes to make the law not a mere pretence at equality in race matters, but actually and thoroughly impartial.

It proposes to do away with all race or class distinctions in appointments to the office of Justice of the Peace—thus rendering all Native Magistrates, uncovenanted Deputy Magistrates as well as covenanted Joint or Assistant Magistrates, eligible for this jurisdiction. At the same time, it would give to all accused persons, whether Natives or Europeans, the right of demanding to be tried by a magistrate of their own race. It would, in fact, preserve to Europeans a very small portion of that right of challenge which they possess at home; and it would also confer this small portion on Natives as well.

We consider this a most happy consummation; and we are sure that all the most loyal folk on both sides of the controversy will rejoice at a termination that finds a means of raising the Native without humiliating the European. This is the line which we, in this journal, have taken from the very first in this wretched controversy. Mutual respect, the widest and most catholic mutual toleration, should be our watch-words in India, if Englishmen and Indians are ever to attain there that complete solidarity of sympathies and interests, which it has been the chief object in life of many of us to advance. At the very first symptom of the Statesman taking this truly liberal line, we reprinted our contemporary's article in our "Spirit of the Indian Press," and commented on it in this column in terms of the warmest commendation.

We regret to observe that it is stated by the Indian Daily News that a member of Lord Ripon's Government was responsible for getting up the Native meeting in Bombay in support of the Ilbert Bill, and it is further stated that the same misguided member of Government has inspired a ridiculous Manifesto lately telegraphed to the Government of India by a Native Association at Bombay, with a view of putting pressure on the Viceroy and his Council, and of inflaming race hatred. After Mr. Hunter's letters to the Times, it is unhappily clear that some of the members of Lord Ripon's Government are willing to go very far afield in their desire to bolster up this unfortunate measure.

THE latest Reuter states that the Bill will be debated on January 4, and then sent to a select committee. The Council of the Anglo-Indian Defence Association obviously do well to sit de die in diem at this critical period.

GENERAL GILLESPIE is marching into Bikaner with a larger force of Horse, Foot, and Artillery than has been used for domestic disturbances in India for a long time past. General Hills who is to command the Akha Expedition, was expected at Tezporé on Wednesday last. The leader of the Akhas is stated to be no mere savage but to have been educated at the Zillah School at Tezporé.

MR. ATKINS's great meeting at Brighton last Friday was, if possible, eclipsed by the marvellous success which has attended his mission at Bolton. We hear that steps are being taken, in accordance with the resolution passed at the Brighton meeting, to forward to Mr. Gladstone, or to Parliament, a petition from the good Brighton folks, protesting against the Bill. At Bolton last night Major Hesketh presided at an enthusiastic meeting of working men, who were absolutely unanimous in condemning the Bill; and they also carried a motion that the resolutions should be at once submitted to Mr. Gladstone and to Lord Kimberley.

Our clever Radical contemporary, the Western Morning News, thus unwittingly testifies to the growing dislike with which the Ilbert Bill is regarded by the more thoughtful classes in English Society:—

"I was present last night at a meeting of the C.C.C. The C.C.C. is not the Central Criminal Court, but the Curates' Clerical Club. In its early days it was beloved of Maurice and Kingsley; to the last it was visited by Stanley; and it is supposed to be a nucleus for the Liberal clergy of London. Last night the Ilbert Bill was debated, Mr. Malcolm MacColl championing that measure. But, alas! for the Liberalism of the Liberal clergy, only one of them supported the principle of equality. They did not see why conquerors should be judged by the conquered. They were certain that Lord Ripon had disturbed our rule in India, and they whispered that he might lose it for us. They were ready to accept Anglo-Indian opinion—'expert' opinion they called it—before the opinion of idealist theorists, and at the close, though a judge of the District Court, after thirty years' experience of India, declared that the measure, if wisely worked, would do no harm, a single clergyman raised his voice, and asked where were the Liberal clergy. They did not seem, it is certain, to be very much present, and a division had it been taken, would have gone against the measure. Mr. Malcolm MacColl was left almost alone, and the only champions of the measure who seemed to know the facts were laymen."

We take the following obituary for the week ending Nov. 23, from the Times of India:—Her Highness the Maharani of Hutwa; Mr. F. F. Woolcott, veterinary surgeon of Calcutta; Babu Piari Chand Mittra, Bengali novelist; Dustoor Sorabjee Rustomjee Mulla Feroze, head priest of the Kudmi section of the Parsee community; Mr. Edward Augustus Baboonan, late of Purneah, Indigo planter.

We take the following account of the Calcutta Indigo Market from Messrs. William Moran and Co.'s Market Report:—

"Since the date of our last issue, four public sales have been held, at which 3,415 chests were offered, and 2,940 chests sold. The catalogues have included a few parcels of good and fine Indigo from Bengal and Behar; these met with good competition, and we quote an advance of about Rs. 20 per maund on good and fine qualities, and Rs. 10 to Rs. 15 on ordinary and middling, as compared with the average rates of last season. The proportion of native ounces offered has again been large, and the quality mostly ordinary to middling; these descriptions meet with fair demand at previous prices; whilst good and fine lots, whenever offered, are in great request, and sell at comparatively much higher rates. The total quantity disposed of up to date is about 36,000 maunds, against 27,000 maunds at the same date last year."

THE same authority has the following on the Calcutta Tea Market for the week ending Nov. 27:—

"At the sales held on the 22nd inst., 10,854 packages were offered, and 10,283 sold. The demand generally was good, but medium Pekoes and the few fine lots offering were most competed for. Medium Broken Pekoes and some good Pekoe Souchongs were, perhaps, a trifle easier. About 8,000 packages will be catalogued this week."

THE Englishman gives the following account of the Calcutta Freight Market for the week ending Nov. 27:

"There has been a little more inquiry since our last for Cape tonnage, a fair amount of business having been put through, and rates have again advanced. The demand has been entirely for jute tonnage. Steamers, however, have been neglected, and rates by Canal are quite nominal. Four vessels have been chartered for London, two for Dundee, one for New York, and one for the West Indies, and another has taken the Liverpool berth. Our unfixed tonnage has decreased to 44,000 tons."

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

THE following is the official summary of the reports of the Agricultural Department on the state of the weather and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending Nov. 29:—

"There has been no noticeable alteration in the weather and prospects recorded in the previous week's summary. The rainfall has been lighter in Madras, and entirely absent from Bombay. The crops in those presidencies and in Central India, Rajputana, Punjab, North Western Provinces and Oudh, and the Central Provinces are generally doing well, but an early rainfall would much benefit the young rabi crops in Northern and Central India. In Bengal the weather continues clear and rainless, and prospects are unchanged. No report has been received from British Burma. The public health continues fair, except for the prevalence of fever and slight cholera in parts."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

THE following is the usual weekly telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Dec. 16:—

"Although all the members of the Government are now assembled in Calcutta, nothing has yet transpired regarding the course to be taken with respect to the Ilbert Bill. It is probable that the subject will not be brought before the Legislative Council till after the Christmas holidays."

"The compromise, which I mentioned last week—namely, to give every European prisoner the option of claiming a trial before a European Judge or Magistrate—is believed to be now under the consideration of the members of the Executive Government. This compromise has much to recommend it. It would probably be accepted by the Europeans as sufficiently safeguarding privileges; and it would enable the Government to sweep away class distinctions between covenanted and uncovenanted officials and district and subordinate magistrates; all of which the Bill in its present shape perpetuates and accentuates. Were the proposed clause added, then, inasmuch as jurisdiction would be founded on consent, thereby carrying out Mr. Justice Stephen's principle, there would be nothing to prevent the humblest native magistrate trying a European, so long as the European did not object, and by enabling the Government to appoint any native to be a justice of the peace, it would remove an existing race disqualification which the present Bill hardly touches. The result would be that a measure logically complete in itself, and having all the elements of finality, would be substituted for a mere tinkering piece of legislation, which will satisfy nobody, and only open the door for further tinkering and fresh agitation."

"If the Government saw its way to give a similar option to natives, allowing a native prisoner to claim a trial before a native tribunal, the European community would certainly not object. They have no desire to claim for themselves a privilege which they would deny to their native fellow-subjects. Nor would the grant of such option really cause any administrative inconvenience, for it is very certain that in practice native prisoners would rarely, if ever, avail themselves of it. Of all the proposals yet brought forward, short of that of the actual withdrawal of the Bill, this one seems to afford the easiest and best way out of the difficulty, and the surest means of putting an end to the present lamentable and dangerous state of affairs."

"The Indian Daily News, a Calcutta journal, has brought a most serious charge against a member of the Government. It positively asserts that a native meeting in favour of the Ilbert Bill, held in Bombay some months ago, was convened at the express request of a member of the Executive Council, conveyed in a letter in his own handwriting. It goes on to argue, from internal evidence, that a ridiculous manifesto, lately telegraphed to the Government by a native association at Bombay has been inspired by the same person. The objects of that manifesto are, it says, perfectly plain. They are—first, to bring pressure to bear on the Viceroy and his Council; and, secondly, to inflame race hatred. It adds:—

"In former times an Englishman in such a position, who instigated native meetings against his countrymen, would have been said, in pursuing the first object, to be a traitor to his colleagues, and in pursuing the second, to be a traitor to his country."

"Although this grave charge was made nearly a week ago, no contradiction of it has yet appeared. It is well known who is the member of Council meant; but meanwhile the public awaits a contradiction, or more tangible proof."

"At a meeting of the Council of the Anglo-Indian Defence Association, held on Wednesday last, it was resolved:—'First, that the date for the public meeting decided on in November be not fixed until after the next meeting of the Legislative Council; secondly, that this Council sit de die in diem, until such time as the further action of Government with reference to the Bill be made known.'

"An enthusiastic meeting was held at Golaghat on the 9th inst., every planter in the district attending. Resolutions were passed condemning the Bill, and refusing to accept the Government modification. The meeting was closed with three cheers for the Queen and the Duke and Duchess of Connaught."

"The disturbances which have broken out in Bikaner are due to a quarrel between the Maharajah and the Thakurs, or Barons. Under the feudal system which formerly prevailed in Rajpootana, these Thakurs were obliged to furnish a certain number of cavalry for the Maharajah's service. Of late years this liability has been compounded for by the payment of an annual sum called rekht, whereby 200 rupees are fixed as the equivalent for each horseman. The Maharajah recently tried to increase the sum, but the Thakurs resisted the attempt; and for several weeks the Maharajah's troops and the retainers of the Thakurs have been watching one another, each party afraid to strike the first blow. Under the advice of the Governor General's Agent for Rajpootana, the following force has been despatched to restore order:—Three guns F-2 Royal Artillery, two companies of the Worcestershire Regiment, a wing of the 8th Bombay Native Infantry, a company of sappers, a Thairwarra battalion, 400 Erinpura Irregulars, and 150 Deoli Irregular Cavalry. It is expected that the Thakurs will submit on the appearance of the troops."

"The Akha expedition will be strengthened by half of No. 1 Mountain Battery of the Punjab Frontier Force, and half a company of sappers from Roorkee. An advanced guard of 100 frontier police under Lieutenant Molesworth is at Bullukpung, a strong point on the Akha frontier. The detachment of the 43rd Regiment is already at camp at Bullipara."

"A correspondent of the Englishman states that the Akhas themselves are a small body, but that they are leagued with the Mijjees, a powerful tribe inhabiting the ranges to the north of them, and into whose territory they will probably retire when the invading force appears. The leader of the Akhas is no mere savage, but was educated in the Zillah School at Tezpor. Brigadier Sale Hills, who commands, was expected to arrive at Tezpor on Wednesday last."

"The Duke and Duchess of Connaught arrived in Benares on Tuesday and spent two days there, during which they inspected all the places of interest. Their Royal Highnesses then proceeded to Lucknow, where they were received by General Cureton with great ceremony, and visited the Residency, the Bailey Guard, &c."

NOTICES OF BOOKS.

"ARMY AND NAVY MAGAZINE."

THE Army and Navy Magazine for December commences with one of Colonel Malletson's instructive articles on "The Battlefields of Germany," that of Jankowitz being described. Mrs. Phillips's novel of "Man Proposes," is continued. In the chapters now before us the man does propose and it will remain to be seen what will be the result thereof. Mr. H. G. Keene takes in hand the question "Is India a conquered Country?" coming to the conclusion that India is not a country conquered but acquired. The "Notes at the Homburg Manœuvres," by F.N.M., are good and practical, and will be read with much interest by soldiers whose love for their profession leads them to watch what is done abroad. A new and excellent feature accompanies this article in good maps apparently photo-zincographed from the original German maps of the country. These enable the movements and arrangements of the troops to be followed with comparative ease. The number concludes with an article by Colonel Ford, on "Our Field Artillery," in which the distribution of our artillery is marked out on new lines, but with the object kept in view, that the batteries should have an effective organisation, rendering them fit to take the field rapidly in case of emergency.

SPIRIT OF THE INDIAN PRESS.

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

BEFORE entering on a detailed criticism of the clauses of the Rent Bill, it will be interesting to note the various opinions which have been expressed against the principles of the Bill. As a contemporary observed these opinions by no means embody the strength of the opposition to the principles underlying this measure. Some officers, we are told in one of the official reports, felt themselves embarrassed in the matter of expressing an opinion at all, and we are not surprised that officers were chary of expressing their views after the former experience of the way in which these views were received when opposed to those of officers identified with the preparation of the former drafts.

To the principles of the Bill the Lieutenant Governor gives his adherence. We agree, with him in saying that some legislation was necessary. Every one must admit that Act 10 had become unworkable, and something was needed in the way of defining existing rights and enforcing undisputed obligations. Mr. Rivers Thompson says, however that legislation is needed on the broad lines of the present Bill. To this expression we take exception. It is a dangerous principle to admit the necessity of legislation on "broad lines." With statesmen whose legislative ambition was simply to solidify custom and to move in unison with the growing wants and necessities of those for whom they were legislating it would be perfectly safe to leave the lines upon which they were to move as broad as possible. It is otherwise when we have a Conservative country like India contentedly being made the victim of the doctrinaire experiments which commend themselves to the Birmingham school in England and to their followers in this country, who happen now to be in power. We are told by the poet of England being a country,

"Where freedom slowly broadened down
From precedent to precedent."

But that is all changed now. What modern Radicals call "freedom," that is, the right of doing with your own according to what they think right, is not slowly broadening down in these advanced days. It is hurrying along down the precipice which leads to Communism with a violence that shakes to its foundation every structure of vested rights and interest which has stood through the various changes of centuries, and under the shadow of which the people have lived contentedly and the country has prospered. Under modern legislation the line has broadened to an alarming extent, but only in the one direction and, if it goes on at the pace at which it has started, we shall soon lose sight altogether of the line from which we are receding—the line which marked and defined the rights of property. We, therefore, do not go with the Lieutenant Governor in admitting that it is necessary to legislate on the broad lines of the Bill now before us. It is necessary to legislate; but the lines upon which legislation should be undertaken should, we think, be considerably narrowed down from the exceeding broad lines upon which this Bill is based. We fear, to use a somewhat irreverent analogy, that these lines are boundaries of a broad path which will have a tendency to lead to destruction. Of the opinions published on the Bill, those only criticise its principles who are opposed to them. It would not, however, we think, be an accurate representation of official opinion to assume that those who make no remark on those principles are necessarily committed to an approval of them; and indeed, in many cases, this is obvious from the former reports of officers on the draft Bill of the Rent Commissioners.

The first opinions published are those of the Bhagalpur officers, Messrs. Barlow, D'Oyly, Worsley, Weekes, and Porch. They do not seem to have discussed the principles at all, but to have plunged at once into a discussion of the several clauses of the Bill. We next have the reports of some of the District Judges, of whom Mr. J. F. Stevens, the Judge of Sâran, writes:—"It is obvious that in general the Bengal Tenancy Bill, 1883, has been framed with a view rather to the interest of the ryots than that of the landlord. It is doubtless true that to a considerable extent the interests of the ryots and that of the landlords are really in the long run not so completely separate as is frequently assumed; but while I recognise this principle, and I am not disposed to agree with my subordinates in condemning all limitation to the enormous arbitrary powers which the landlords at present can and do exercise, especially in certain parts of the province of Behar, I am inclined to think that in some particulars the Bill goes further in that direction than is either necessary or desirable." Mr. Meres expresses no opinion, neither do Messrs. Bradbury and Butt. Mr. Garrett gives the principles of the Bill his approval. Mr. Towers, the Judge of Tipperâ, whilst giving the Bill every credit for the ability shown in it, says:—"It is clear, however, that it is conceived more in the interest of the tenant than of the landlord, and, while the latter gains very little from it, the tenant on the other hand acquires substantial advantages at the landlord's expense, which in many cases exceed the tenant's demands which are entirely novel in their character, and which appear to be derived rather from a consideration of what has been found expedient in foreign countries than from Indian law or customs."

With this opinion we agree in toto, excepting that we question the fact whether the new departure has been found expedient in those countries in which it has been tried. It has certainly brought the land in the North of France into the hands of a plutocracy. In Ireland it has taken the land away from the landlord, but up to date it may, we venture to say, be asserted that the class which have chiefly benefited are the country attorneys.

We do not reproduce the opinion of native judicial officers, for the obvious reason that it might at once be said that these gentlemen were identified with zemindars' interests, and that their opinions, therefore, were liable to be warped by prejudice.

We next come to the opinions of executive officers. Of these the first in order is that of Mr. Beames, who says:—"It is unnecessary to examine in detail the provisions of the Bill, which as the final outcome of much protracted and careful argument, may, in my opinion be generally accepted as likely to prove workable and fair to all parties affected by it, though I am still very much in doubt whether any enactment of the kind is really required, except perhaps in Behar."

Mr. Beames then goes to the root of the objection which all reasonable opponents of the Bill entertain towards its principles, and says:—

"It is not, of course, to be expected that the Bill, even in its present expurgated state, will escape opposition, nor do I think such opposition unreasonable. It is all very well to say that the framers of the permanent settlement specifically, and in set terms, reserved to themselves and their successors the right to interfere between the zemindar and the ryot, whenever such a step might seem necessary for the protection of the latter, and that, though no such interference practically did take place during the sixty-six years that intervened between 1793 and 1857, yet that 'It is never too late to mend,' and that consequently we are going to interfere now. The answer to that argument is that during all those years we have allowed men to buy zemindari and tenures in the belief, fully justified by our actions, that no interference would take place, and that it is not fair to those persons suddenly to uproot the conditions of the faith on which they have invested their money. I so far agree with this argument as to think that in any changes which may now be made, it is not sufficient to go back to first principles and base our enactment solely on what we understand to be the relation of landlord and tenant as established by Lord Cornwallis's Regulations. We must go further than this, and take into consideration the present status and vested interests of the proprietary body whom we have called into existence, and whom we have, during nearly a century, allowed to acquire rights and privileges which are none the less deserving of respect now, because their growth and development were not contemplated by the statesmen of the last century. . . . There is a great deal of sentimental talk about the woes of the ryot, and I venture to think that no one who knows anything of the incidents of my obscure career will suspect me, at any rate, of tendency to overlook the claims of the ryot, or to side too strongly with the zemindar. But I cannot overlook the fact, so ably urged by the Hon. Kristo Das Pal, that the Bengal of to-day offers a startling contrast to the Bengal of 1793, and that the wealth and prosperity of the country has increased—increased beyond all precedent—under the Permanent Settlement. There is much force in his remark that a great portion of this increase is due to the zemindar body as a whole, and that they have been very active and powerful factors in the development of this prosperity. The ryot suffers from causes over which no Government can have any control. The country is over-peopled, and the intensity of the struggle for existence is due principally to this cause, and not to the capacity or bad management of the zemindars. Every one will marry, and will have heaps of children. No one will emigrate, a vast majority will grow nothing but paddy, and the poorest will spend in advance the earnings of ten years on a marriage feast or a religious ceremony. It is very doubtful whether any legislative measures will improve the condition of people whose manners, customs, and prejudices are so utterly incompatible with improvement as those."

These are the words of an officer who is prepared to discuss the Bill as a workable and fair measure. They are not the utterances of any mere partisan. The experience of the man who wrote them is well-known. We ask our readers, and we ask those in whose hands the future of this Bill rests, to weigh them, even against the plausibly philanthropic arguments of those who would legislate for the country upon pure and simple theory, and not in the light of past experience.—Englishman, Nov. 15.

THE EDUCATION COMMISSION REPORT.

THE Education Commission appointed by Resolution of the Supreme Government in Feb. 7, 1882, has at length laid its report before the public. The appointment of this important Commission will be regarded by all as one of the most valuable services of Lord Ripon's Viceroyalty. It was constituted on most liberal lines, and embraced, perhaps, representatives of all divergent views on Indian education. The labours of the members have been of a most arduous and painstaking character, and the patient fidelity with which so many men deeply interested in India, and the education of her teeming peoples, remained for so long at their posts, sifting evidence of a most voluminous and not unfrequently contradictory nature, deserves the highest praise. We learn that the Commission sat steadily at Calcutta for about two months to draw up questions and determine procedure; that it then divided into provincial committees to gather evidence in the different centres, the president himself meeting with each of these committees and presiding at their sessions. Their information being gathered, and every part of the country, with every class of its population, having made its voice heard, the Commission again met as a whole, in December of last year, to draw up its report, and a busy time they had before this was done. Six sectional committees dealt with six chief topics, and thus matured materials for their colleagues. The result lies before us now in a blue-book of 639 pages with an appendix of seventy-two pages, containing most valuable statistical tables, compiled with much industry by Mr. Jacob. The great size of the volume will doubtless deter many from reading it; but this is, perhaps, an evil incidental to all blue-books. What this busy age requires is some condensed statement of the labours of the Commission, which may be read by all who are interested in education. What we desiderate is a pamphlet showing the chief recommendations, with reasons for them, and perhaps a few interesting statistical statements showing the progress and extent of Education in India.

The work of the Commission may be illustrated by the fact that in all 193 witnesses were examined, each of whom gave evidence at considerable length, while in addition there was a vast quantity of representations, memorials, &c., all calling for attention. It is interesting to notice how well Bombay was represented in this. Thirty-eight witnesses and forty memorials were from Bombay, while Madras had thirty-three witnesses and twenty-two memorials, and Bengal thirty-one witnesses and thirteen memorials. The Punjab stands highest in regard to this matter, with forty-five witnesses and ninety-six memorials. To estimate the work of the Commission aright, we require also to bear in mind the great extent of India and its varieties of language, custom, and life. Most probably the vastness of the task prevented any inquiry into this subject being attempted earlier. In 1859 an inquiry was ordered, but it did not take place. A period of twenty-eight years has thus elapsed since the great Despatch of 1854 gave shape of Indian education, and it was full time certainly that the policy of the local Government should be compared with the intentions of the Despatch, and the measure of their success or failure ascertained. Such a lengthy period is sufficient for purposes of inquiry; and such an inquiry was necessary. Some superior minds may cynically undervalue the importance of such great inquiries, but they are really valuable in public interests, and let the light in on departments inclined to routine and complacency. But what are we to expect from such a Commission? Not much, perhaps, of a very definite sort, and yet that may be most valuable. We may not get the multum in parvo, but we may obtain something really useful. The Commission gives us a long list of recommendations which have already appeared in our columns. They are very numerous, being in all about 200. Some of these are of first-rate importance, while others hardly deserve the emphasis put upon them; but here, again, the varieties and differences of the Presidencies must be borne in mind, and what may not appear so useful to us may appear important elsewhere. We might have been better pleased with some more brief and classified list of recommendations. The Commission had, however, to proceed tentatively; and confidence may be felt that the Viceroy, who has the whole subject much at heart, will see that the Education Bill will embody the more important recommendations of the Commissioners.

That great progress has been made in education since 1854 clearly appears in this report. In 1855, 925,000 boys were under instruction in India, while in 1882 there was 2,766,430; but the necessity of an impetus being given to primary or mass educations in the vernaculars, is shown by the fact that only 1 in 42 of the population are educated in any measure among men. Madras stands at the head of the list here with 1 in 30, and this is largely due to the development of aided or private efforts; in Bombay 1 in 31; in Bengal 1 in 34. But, turning from boys' to girls' schools, the progress here is much more urgent. Only 1 in 858 girls receives instructions. In view of these figures the necessity of increased efforts was apparent to the Commission, and they were most earnest in the matter. But they refused even to consider a measure of compulsory education, believing that the time for this had not yet come, the habits and the poverty of the people presenting at present insuperable obstacles. More, perhaps, should have been said about free education by the Commission than has been said; for to spread education among the masses it must be made free or as cheap as possible. It is of much value, however, to the further advance of primary education that the Commission most distinctly emphasises the principle that the relation of the State to primary education should be very different from what it should be to secondary; that primary education should be the first charge on the Educational budget. The Commission also most wisely recommends that the existing indigenous schools of the country should be in every way encouraged, and interfered with as little as possible. It seems to us that it is on the gradual improvement of these that the spread of primary education depends more than on anything else.

Another most useful service rendered to the country by the Commission is the endeavour to put in a clear light the relation of departmental schools, and efforts to aided schools, and private effort. The main thought of the Commission is to encourage and develop every form of effort in the country, and on free lines. This shows great wisdom. Too often there has been an unhealthy state of rivalry between Government schools and aided schools, tending to the discouragement of private effort. The people have got into the habit of depending on State help for the providing of schools. Now, the Commission points out that in secondary education Government schools should be looked upon as temporary, not as permanent, institutions. The people should provide for secondary education by their own activities; but the Commission would have nothing done hastily. Again, the Commission has done well in pointing out the necessity of normal schools. In this Presidency, in particular, there is a great want of trained teachers, and it is not the function of a University to provide teachers. It may impart knowledge, but it cannot train men to teach. In Madras there is a very complete system for providing trained teachers. In connection with this the commission also urges that teachers should be in every way encouraged by Government dealing liberally with them, and in particular it urges the repeal of the twenty-five years' rule in certain cases. Very important questions in connection with secondary education and the entrance and matriculation examination occupied the commission; but to these we may refer again. The chapters on female education, collegiate education, and legislation are also deeply interesting. The agreement of the commission on all essential matters is clear, but it was not to be expected that complete unanimity on all points was to be obtained in such a body. A very important point is brought out in a quotation given by Mr. Telang. Mr. Arnold has said that while previous French Governments had decreed systems of education, the "Government of the Restoration decreed funds." The general conclusion forced in upon us by the report is the necessity of more liberal educational budgets, larger and more elastic grants; and to secure these the sympathies of the people require to be enlisted in every way possible, so that they may co-operate with Government. Neither a paternal nor a laissez faire system is now wanted, but a wise combination of both. The Commission will have done good service if only by drawing attention to the relation of the State to primary education and to private effort respectively.

LOCAL SELF-GOVERNMENT IN BOMBAY.

THE Bombay Legislative Council will shortly assemble to resume consideration of the bills which were introduced by the Hon. J. B. Peile, three months ago, to give effect to Lord Ripon's scheme of local self-government. After a long and interesting debate the measures were referred to a Select Committee, consisting of the Hon. J. B. Peile, the Hon. Colonel C. J. Merriman, the Hon. Rao Saheb V. N. Mandlik, the Hon. Budroodeen Tyabjee, and the Hon. Rao Bahadur K. V. Raste. The committee have completed their labours, and their report was issued in a special edition of the Government Gazette, Rao Saheb V. N. Mandlik, whose sharp criticisms of the measure drew from his Excellency the Governor the statement that he would rather leave India as unpopular a man as ever left these shores than sacrifice one point of principle which he believed to be safe, did not take part in the deliberations of the special committee, and the Hon. B. Tyabjee has added a memorandum, in which he dissents from some of the conclusions at which his colleagues have arrived. On the principal question, namely, the constitution of the local boards, the special committee decided to suggest no change. The bill provides that half the members shall be elective, and although the "official president" will be a member of the Civil Service, the vice-president will be elected by the board, and the duty of presiding at meetings is to be left to him "as far as possible." The committee adopt an argument which was used by Sir James Fergusson in the debate of August last. His Excellency, replying to some objections raised by the Mahomedan representative, affirmed that the most useful members, of the Bombay Municipal Corporation were those nominated either by Government or the Bench of Justices. The committee protest against the assumption that the elective members will enjoy a monopoly of reason and patriotism, but the protest is an act of supererogation, as nobody seriously contends that they will, while the Government pledge themselves to extend the elective system when such a course is "recommended by practical experience." The Hon. B. Tyabjee only consents to the present scale of representation on the ground that the bills "have been purposely framed so as to allow of an advance from the minimum towards more completely representative boards as soon as the capacity of the people for representative institutions has been established." The committee recommend several important modifications regarding Sind, which was treated in the original bill less liberally than other parts of the Presidency. One of the suggested changes has been adopted with the view of complying with the claim of some parts of the province to be placed under the ordinary provisions as recommended by Mr. Tyabjee. That gentleman announces his intention of moving that an educational and professional qualification should be laid down for the taluka and district boards as well as for the municipalities. If the Government sincerely wish the scheme to succeed, we do not see how they can consistently oppose the honourable gentleman's motion. The more intelligent the voters are the more chance will there be of the experiment becoming a success. "As the matter now stands," Mr. Tyabjee says, "It is property and property alone (with but slight exceptions) that is a qualification intelligence, education, or experience of public affairs counting for nothing." The principle for which Mr. Tyabjee contends is admittedly a reasonable one, and as it has been conceded in the case of municipal bodies, the Government would do well to treat all the new boards alike. The concession would be a small one, and need not, we venture to think, call for the "sacrifice" of any "safe principles" on the part of Sir James Fergusson, or any of his colleagues of the Government.

THE ILBERT BILL.

A MEETING to protest against the Ilbert Bill was held at Benmore on Saturday, Nov. 29, at which over one hundred people were present, all classes of the community being represented. The following resolutions were proposed and unanimously carried:—First—With reference to the determination of Government to force the Ilbert Bill into law, in defiance of the collective opinion of the European and Anglo-Indian community, and in contempt of the opinions from its own officers, it has become necessary for that community to express its emphatic disapproval of the arbitrary and unjustifiable abuse of powers with which the Government has been entrusted by the British nation. Second—Strong doubts having been entertained by competent authorities as to the powers of the Legislature to pass such a measure without the special authority of Parliament, this meeting unanimously adopts concerted measures with the European and Anglo-Indian community to dispute its validity, and render inoperative, by legitimate means, an Act, which, if passed without such authority, the meeting believes would be an unconstitutional usurpation of legislative powers and of no legal obligation. Third—Supposing the Legislature is armed with valid powers to pass the Act, this meeting protests against the Legislative machinery being employed to introduce a vicious and mischievous principle to confer unnecessary criminal jurisdiction on eleven natives, only three of whom would be in a position to exercise it, and at the same time depriving the British community, consisting of 2,04,000 persons of inherited and cherished rights. Fourth—This meeting records its unanimous conviction that in opposing the principle, the members of the European community are actuated by no ill-feeling towards natives, and, in protesting against the despotic and arbitrary course pursued by the Government of India, are protecting and promoting the best interests of the community, native as well as European. The National Anthem was then sung, and after three cheers for Her Majesty and the Duke of connaught, the meeting separated.

Up to the 22nd instant, the Secretary of State for India had not vouchsafed a reply to the letter of Sir A. Arbuthnot and the London Committee of the Defence Association, in which they drew attention to the overwhelming majority against the Ilbert Bill shown in the official opinions on the bill.

The Civil and Military Gazette, in a statement that appears to be inspired, says, in connection with the Ilbert Bill, that his Excellency the Viceroy does not mean to defer proceeding with the measure, until Parliament next meets. His Excellency will not hurry on the bill; and everything will be done with due deliberation. Admitting that Lord Northbrook's recent speech conveys a fair idea of the proposed modifications of the bill, as recommended by the Indian Government, the Viceroy's reticence in announcing the same is stated to be due to the peculiar circumstances of the case, for official etiquette precludes the Viceroy from pronouncing the policy of his Government until the receipt of the despatch from the Secretary of State, the despatch being said to be now on its way. Lord Kimberley's repudiation of the bill is said to be incorrect, and due to some misapprehension. Government have no intention of extending the provisions of Habeas Corpus to natives. The Government theory is that if the Bill is passed in a modified form, Lord Ripon's main principles will not be departed from, the object sought being the removal of disqualifications and not race distinctions. The local feeling here is against even a modified bill.

Mr. D. H. Macfarlane, M.P., writes as follows to the Englishman:—

Sir,—Having returned to India for a short visit after an absence of nearly twelve years, I am shocked to find the relations between my countrymen and the natives in such a state of tension. Such a condition of affairs is not good for either of them; it is not for their joint interest, for the good and peaceful government of the country is essential to the welfare of both. Is there, then, no way of reconciling this supposed conflict of interest? For I am sure that, whatever they may say or think in moments of excitement, what is good for one is good for the other, and what is bad for one is not good for the other. There is now before the public a bill which has led to much strife already, and may lead to much more. That strife will not cease when the bill is passed, if it ever does pass. This bill proposes to take away from Englishmen a highly prized privilege, some say an inherited right, to soothe a sentimental feeling held by such a small number of natives that they can, at present, be counted on the fingers of one hand. This is not a party question, in the English sense, for Tory governments in England have supported the principles embodied in the Ilbert Bill as well as Liberal governments. It is not for people here to consider who was the father or who was the mother of this bill, but if it is bad, to oppose it.

I write not to discuss its merits or its demerits, but to make a suggestion in the interests of peace and goodwill. The natives are not responsible for the Ilbert Bill, and it is not fair to endeavour to fasten it upon them. The opponents of the Bill say that it is designed to remove a sentimental grievance felt by a handful of natives, and its advocates assert that the English outcry is entirely a sentimental one. I am far from making any such admission on the European side, but if I did, what then? Surely the preponderance of numbers affected is, and always must be, in favour of the opposition. Looking at it from the outside of the fray, and having taken no part that could tend to distort my view of the whole question, it is clear to me that it would have been better for everybody if this bill had never been born. But, like a good many other undesirable things, it has come into the world, and has to be disposed of. If natives and Europeans would agree to go in a solemn procession with the Ilbert Bill upon a suitable bier, and consign it to the newly discovered "Black Hole," it would be a good deed done. Let them bury it there, and with it the memory of the black hole of the past and the black hole of the present into which the Government has floundered.

Natives have many privileges which are respected, and rightly respected, by the Government and the law. Is it then unreasonable that Europeans should have one, and that they should cling to it? Never mind whether you think it reasonable or unreasonable in itself, it hurts no one, and to take it away will benefit no one. Let us render unto Cæsar the things that are Cæsar's; to the Hindoos the things that are Hindoo; to the Mahomedans the things are Mahomedan; and to the English the things that are English. The Government professes to be pledged to the Ilbert Bill, because it is a concession to natives. Could not the natives meet and say to the Government:—"We think that the principles of the bill are fair in themselves, but we value peace and good relations with our English fellow subjects more than abstract propositions, and this bill is little more, and we pray that you will withdraw it. We are sorry that our English friends do not trust us more, but we are content to let time do that which force cannot do. In time confidence will grow, for we will show that we are worthy of it. You may give us jurisdiction over Englishmen, but you cannot create confidence by Acts of Council or Acts of Parliament, and we do not care for one without the other. We natives know that the foundations of Indian society rest upon inequality, and while we claim a recognition of this fundamental principle of our daily life, we cannot consistently object to the claims of others. We know that whatever theoretical equality may be proclaimed, there is not and cannot be, equality between natives themselves. Should not we, high caste natives, resent as an outrage upon our sense of decorum and right the appointment to the bench of a low caste person? We would refuse to enter the room in which he held his court. That being so, we pray that the prejudices of others may be respected, as ours are, and that the Ilbert Bill may be withdrawn."

I have ventured to make one or two suggestions for the consideration of our native friends, and I hope that they will accept them as being offered in a spirit of good will, and out of a desire to see confidence restored between natives and Europeans. If, by their action, the natives could induce the Government to withdraw the Ilbert Bill, they would have established a claim upon the European community which might be of service to them when their own turn for unacceptable legislation comes.

The Hon. H. J. Reynolds, late Secretary to the Government of Bengal, and additional member of the Viceroy's Council writes as follows to the Englishman:—

Sir,—I have read with much regret your remarks on the announcement which Lord Northbrook is reported to have lately made at Bristol on the subject of the Ilbert Bill. The bill, as brought before the Council in March last, was undoubtedly open to criticism. Its wording was at once too wide and too narrow. It permitted the Government to confer the powers of a justice of the peace upon some persons who would, perhaps, have been unfitted to exercise them; and, at the same time, it excluded from these powers some classes to whom the functions in question might very properly be entrusted. While, therefore, I have never hesitated to express my approval of the principle of the bill, I have carefully avoided pledging myself to any support of its detailed provisions. We are now informed, on the authority of Lord Northbrook, that the Government has consented to certain modifications of the original draft. With these modifications, the bill appears to me to be a perfectly harmless measure, and a mere expression of principles to which all parties in the State have long ago signified their assent. I should have hoped that these modifications would have removed the objections of reasonable men, and that all would have gladly welcomed the opportunity of putting an end to the state of estrangement between the non-official Europeans and the Government, which has been the unhappy result of the discussions which have taken place in connection with this bill. I have, therefore, been deeply pained to read in your columns that the concessions which Government has made are considered to be of no value at all, and that the agitation is to be continued as vehemently and as persistently as before.

That the vehemence of the agitation should be unabated is surely a thing to be deplored, not only in the public interest, but for the credit of the agitators themselves. Those who have denounced this bill, whether on the platforms of public meetings, or in the columns of the newspapers, seem to me to have exceeded the bounds, not merely of moderation, but of common sense. As a humble supporter of the principle of the measure, and at the same time one who is inclined to take a Conservative view of political questions, I find myself credited with sentiments which I utterly repudiate, and assailed by statements against which my reason revolts. I am not in the habit of saying "Perish India." I have not the least wish to scuttle out of the country. I would never consent to drag the banner of England through the mire. But I am assured by Mr. Branson and Mr. Plunket, and the fervid orators of St. James's Hall, that all these things are implied in the passing of this bill, and that those who do not protest against it are destroying our imperial prestige, putting the conquering race under the feet of the conquered, and abandoning the immemorial birthright of the free-born Briton. It is impossible, I am told, that any supporter of this bill can act from honest or patriotic motives. He must be either a traitor or a sycophant, or possibly both. It seems at first sight somewhat improbable that wealthy members of the peerage, like the Viceroy and Lord Northbrook, should be engaged in a conspiracy to ensure the triumph of democracy and communism, but I am informed that this is undoubtedly the case, and that the Ilbert Bill is one of the steps which are to bring us within measurable distance of the desired consummation.

As these assurances are calculated rather to bewilder than to satisfy a plain man like myself, I shall be glad if you will allow me briefly to state why one who is proud of the name of Englishman, and is neither a Radical nor a Revolutionist, thinks it his duty to give his voice and his vote in support of this bill.

A correspondent of your paper, who has written lengthily and learnedly on the question, has devoted an elaborate argument to prove that the office of justice of the peace was not an office held under the East India Company, and, therefore, was not an office referred to in the Proclamation of 1858. I am not careful to answer in this matter. It is not upon such considerations as these that the issue will be decided. The argument of "Britannicus," whether valid or not (a point which I do not here propose to discuss) would not be out of place if the question were one of the strict construction of a penal statute. But it is sufficient to say that it is the deliberate intention of Parliament, the settled decision of the English people, that the Indian subjects of Her Majesty shall not be debarred by considerations of race, creed, or colour, from admission to offices which they are personally qualified to all. Successive viceroys, successive governments, have repeatedly pledged the faith of England to the acceptance of this principle.

The time has now come when we are called upon to put these professions to a practical test, to decide whether we really mean what we have been saying for the last fifty years. The bill (in the modified form now accepted by the Government) simply proposes to enact that an officer who is deemed fit to be made a district magistrate or a sessions judge, shall not be disqualified from exercising the powers of a justice of the peace, merely because he happens to be a native. It is not a question of the general fitness to sit in judgment upon Englishmen in criminal trials; it is a question whether men who are fit for the highest executive and judicial posts shall be debarred from trying a certain class of cases, not because they are incompetent to try them, but because their nationality is held to be an absolute disqualification.

The bill, however, provides a further safeguard against any possible miscarriage of justice. It allows the accused to move the High Court to transfer the case to another court or magistrate, and it declares that the trial shall not proceed till the result of this application is known.

With these precautions, it cannot seriously be contended that the Bill will in the smallest degree imperil the safety, honour, or liberty of Englishmen in the mofussil. To those who object to the principle of the bill, I have nothing to say, except that that phase of the question has long passed out of the stage of controversy. But I confidently assert that the bill affirms and admitted principle, under conditions and restrictions which provide complete security against the risk of its operating to the prejudice of anyone.

The Englishman, referring to the above, says:—"The hope which Mr. Reynolds had entertained that the opponents of the bill would be satisfied by any such modifications as those announced by Lord Northbrook, could have originated only in a complete misapprehension of the grounds of their opposition, coupled with absolute oblivion of their repeated declarations on the subject. To affirm that the bill, with the proposed modifications, is harmless, is virtually to affirm that the protection afforded by an indefeasible legal principle, and that afforded by the judgment or forbearance of an ever-shifting executive, regarding the bent of whose sympathies nothing certain can be predicted from one day to another are equal. Much of Mr. Reynolds's letter is occupied with repudiation of imputations that have never been made. No one that we are aware of has ever identified the principles or the motives of the authors or supporters of the Ilbert Bill with those of communists. If any one has gone so far as to maintain that no supporter of the bill could be honest or patriotic, the imputation was surely not worth answering. A great deal that is flagrantly dishonest has been done, and much that is both ungenerous and unpatriotic has been said, in support of the bill, but we have never doubted that among its advocates there are men who are acting from honest conviction and who heartily despise such unworthy devices."

THE ILBERT BILL COMPROMISE.

WHEN we recently discussed the Ilbert Bill in its new shape, we did not overlook the fact that Lord Northbrook's announcement at Bristol referred to the modifications which the Viceroy had decided to adopt. We indicated in plain terms that we disapprove of the compromise because it was not accompanied by any declaration that no further attempt will be initiated by the Government to restrict the right of European British subjects in the Mofussil to be tried by their fellow-countrymen; and secondly, because from our previous knowledge of the proclivities of Lord Ripon's Government, we felt certain, though nothing was absolutely known, that any compromise proposed by Lord Ripon would still include statutory civilians amongst the officers on whom it is proposed to confer criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects. The telegram from our London correspondent shows that our surmise was correct. Statutory civilians, we are told, are not excluded under the proposed amendments initiated by Lord Ripon. But though that was a foregone conclusion, we feel constrained to express our regret that the Viceroy should have been so ill-advised as to insist on including these statutory civilians in the Bill against the practically unanimous advice of all the highest judicial officers in India. It never has been and never can be inconsistent with the dignity of the Executive Government to accept the advice of the High Courts in India. There was an occasion when the Government of India could have abandoned the whole measure with dignity. That was when the debate of the 9th March proved conclusively that the position taken up by the originators of the Bill were untenable. Readers of the Times of India will recollect that our advice to the Local Governments and Administrations in March last was to reply promptly to the Government of India that public opinion had been already sufficiently gauged, and that the wisest policy was to abandon the attempt to legislate. That opportunity for a dignified retreat from a false position was lost. Next there came an occasion when the Viceroy could at least have yielded with grace, and that was when the vote so confidently invited, and to which the Government were pledged to give the fullest weight, was shown in July, as we anticipated months before, to be unmistakably adverse. That opportunity was also allowed to slip by, chiefly because the advisers on whom the Viceroy appears to have relied have been buoyed up by the fatuous hope that the opposition to this unprincipled bill would subside, if only the public could be made to understand that the Government have the power to coerce the Legislative Council into passing this measure, and were quite prepared to exercise their absolute powers, if the support of the Secretary of State could be reckoned upon. But a Government which had already made a declaration of its faith in the value of influential public opinions could not repudiate the public vote in India unless they could quote public opinion of some sort in support of their policy. Hence the eagerness of partisan supporters to find some support in England. But in spite of assiduous, and what may be called peculiar, attempts to enlist opinion in England on the side of the Viceroy in this effort to wrest a valued and important privilege from Europeans in India in the guise of a brave and honest attempt to carry out "the authoritative policy laid down by Parliament, and by her Majesty's Ministers for the general administration of the country," the anticipations of those who expected some general expression of opinion in England in favour of the bill have been disappointed. The result is just as was foretold when the Government rashly determined to temporise and departed to Simla, leaving the opposition to the Ilbert Bill to gather strength as the months passed by. The Government having sown the wind last March, are now returning to Calcutta to reap the whirlwind.

In our second telegram the Secretary of State denies that he meant to lay any particular stress on the fact that the bill originated with the Government of India, or to imply that the Home Government disapproved of the measure. He evidently meant that the compromise which Lord Northbrook announced at Bristol is a compromise which has been suggested by the Viceroy, and not by the Cabinet. It is difficult to understand why great surprise should be felt in Indian circles in England at Lord Kimberley placing the whole responsibility of recommending the proposed modification upon the Viceroy. Our London correspondent telegraphs: "The matter now rests entirely with the Indian Council." But when so far back as March last we wrote "it is of course out of the range of possibility that any subordinate Government will recommend that the bill should be proceeded with in its present shape, and it is doubtful whether the Government of India will be influentially supported in any attempt to pass even a measure much more restricted in its scope," we were careful to point out that the question, whether legislation in the direction proposed is necessary, is clearly a question for the members of the Legislative Council in which the bill has been introduced. We have repeatedly taken occasion to impress upon Lord Ripon's partisans that there is such an institution in India as the Viceroy's Legislative Council. When a bill has been introduced into that Council, its fate rests upon the votes of the members of that Council. Appeals by the Executive Government to superior authority for support are all very well as regards the policy of the Executive Government, but when made with respect to any measure already introduced into the Legislative Council, they have only one meaning. The Executive Government are in effect only asking the Secretary of State to pledge himself not to veto the bill if the Viceroy takes the extreme step of coercing his Council into passing the Bill "on united counsels." The responsibility of pushing on the modified bill in the teeth of the opposition already shown will now rest entirely with the Government of India.

When it was announced that the Ilbert Bill would be so far modified as to confer jurisdiction in criminal cases over European British subjects upon native district magistrates and sessions judges, we recommended opponents of the bill to accept this modification if the Government renounced any intention of further interfering with the status of European British subjects, and if statutory civilians were excluded from the bill. So far as we have been able to follow the opinions of the English press in India, such a compromise would have been very generally recommended for acceptance, not because opponents are ready to yield one jot of the principle for which they have fought, but because the bill so modified will, in time, become practically inoperative, and thus the privilege for which many have fought will run the least risk of injury. If such a compromise had been officially announced a few weeks ago, the modified bill might have been proceeded with and its fate settled by the Legislative Council within a day or two of the Viceroy's arrival in Calcutta. Those who have at heart the interests of all classes of the community, and who desire to see India well governed, must view with serious regret the prospect now before the Viceroy and his advisers. That in Calcutta men's minds should be now stirred at the prospect of the head of the Government in India meeting with some untoward expression of feeling on some public occasion in that city is unnatural and wrong. It never has been so; and it ought not to be so. Notwithstanding the sinister rumours which are abroad, we trust that the good sense of the Calcutta community will assert itself, and that the representative of Her Majesty the Queen will be received on all occasions in a manner befitting his rank and position. Still we deplore the fact that the Viceroy has no advisers who can convince him that the blunder which led to the Ilbert Bill is past retrieving, and that the opposition which has been aroused is not a transient one. If Lord Ripon will only examine into the matter once more, aided by his own independent judgment, he will see that the opposition which he himself anticipated, so far back as March, 1882, has daily increased, and gathered strength from the support of many of the highest authorities in India; whilst the supporters of the bill have repeatedly shifted their ground until having emasculated their own measure it is, what the Times has called, a mere simulacrum of the original bill, they tenaciously adhere to the proposal to confer the proposed jurisdiction upon a class of officers of whom they themselves know nothing, and who are declared by the highest judicial authorities in the country to be as far as is at present known unfit for the distinction which it is proposed to thrust upon them. We trust that it is not too late for the position so unfortunately taken up to be reconsidered. Lord Ripon's Government will find their strength taxed to the utmost when they endeavour to pass the Bengal Rent Bill. If any attempt is made to push an unpalatable Ilbert Bill compromise through the Legislative Council "on united counsels," then we may confidently predict that the fate of the Bengal Rent Bill is sealed. Is it too much to hope that the Viceroy will see the wisdom of abandoning the Ilbert Bill, and substitute a short amendment of the Criminal Procedure Code, empowering native district magistrates and sessions judges who have entered the service by competition in England, to exercise the same criminal jurisdiction as Europeans in the same position who have passed the same test?

THE INDIAN COUNCIL AND THE ILBERT BILL.

THE policy of the Ilbert Bill has been so fully discussed that the subject may fairly be said to have been exhausted; but something of considerable importance remains to be said on a question which is hardly understood at all in England, and is very frequently misunderstood in India. This is the nature of the authority of the Council, and the nature and degree of responsibility in reference to legislation which rests on the individual members.

Most of the few persons who know anything whatever about Indian matters would say, if they were asked, that there are in India two Councils—namely, the Executive Council, by which the administrative government of the country is carried on, and the Legislative Council, which is charged with the duty of making laws. Substantially this view of the subject is not far from the truth, but it is inaccurate and misleading, particularly because it suggests a totally false analogy between the English Cabinet and the English Parliament. Stated accurately, the matter stands thus:—There is only one Supreme Council in India—namely, the Council of the Viceroy, which was originally the Council of the Factory of Calcutta, afterwards the Council of the Governor-General of Bengal, and after that the Council of the Governor-General of India. In one form or another, that Council has conducted the whole business, first of Bengal and afterwards of India, from the Regulating Act, which was passed in 1773, to the present day. The history of its legislative powers is curious, but this is not the place in which to tell it at length. From the time of Lord Cornwallis, who became Governor-General for the first time in 1786, it has legislated. There are interesting questions as to the origin and original extent of its legislative powers; but they were exercised upon most important subjects, and have since been recognised. In 1833 and 1853 legislative authority was conferred by statute upon the Council, and in 1861 the Indian Councils Act was passed, which is still in force and by which the whole subject is now regulated.

By this Act, the Council consists of the Viceroy, five ordinary members of Council, and one extraordinary member—the Commander in Chief. Besides these seven members, the Governor or Lieutenant Governor of any province under such an officer is a member ex officio when the Council sits in his province, so that when the Council sits in Calcutta the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal is a member of it for legislative purposes. Besides these eight members, not less than six nor more than twelve additional members are appointed by the Viceroy, of whom not less than one-half must be non-official persons. Thus the greatest possible number of members for legislative purposes is twenty. In the current volume of a well-known book of reference eight such members are mentioned, five Europeans and three natives. The Council thus consists of sixteen members—namely, Lord Ripon, the Commander in Chief, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, five ordinary members of the Council, and eight additional members. Its sittings are held in public; the speeches of the members are published. The sittings for executive business are held in private, and the results only are made public in the form of orders by the Viceroy in Council. The opinion commonly current in India is that, though legally all the persons entitled to be present at legislative meetings are at full liberty to vote as they think proper, there is nevertheless some sort of unwritten law, or principle equivalent in force to a law, which establishes differences of the highest importance between them in this respect. It is admitted that the non-official members not only may, but ought to vote according to their unbiassed opinions as to what is expedient. It is admitted, perhaps rather less explicitly, that the same is true of all the official members who are not ordinary members of the Council; but an opinion prevails, and is frequently acted upon, that the ordinary members of the Council, or, as they are sometimes called, the members of the Executive Council, ought, for purposes of legislation, to be bound by the majority of their own number, so that, for instance, if four of the seven members of the Executive Council were in favour of the Ilbert Bill and the other three were opposed to it, the whole seven ought to vote for it, although the votes of the three who formed the minority might throw out the Bill when the matter was openly debated in a Council held for legislative purposes. So long as this view is adopted and acted on, the Executive Council can practically command a majority and pass any law which the majority approves; and my object in this article is to call the attention of the ordinary members of the Council most earnestly to this subject, and to impress upon them the reasons which exist for believing that they ought in the Legislative Council, to vote according to their own real opinions, and not according to the opinions of the Viceroy, or the opinions of a majority of their own number. It seems paradoxical to doubt so plain a proposition as that a member of a deliberate body ought to give his vote according to his real opinion, but it is easy to understand how a contrary opinion has come to exist in India with reference to the votes of members of the Executive Council. They are apt to regard themselves as being members of a Cabinet like the Cabinet in England, the members of which form a single party from which, if a particular member dissents on a matter of importance, he ought to depart, unless he can bring himself to vote with his party in silence. Now, in India resignation is out of the question, for obvious reasons. Hence the view commonly taken in India is that a dissentient member of the Executive Council ought, in legislative matters, either to support the majority silently, or at the very most, to stay away from the meeting at which his vote would be required.

It is on this view of the subject that I wish to offer some remarks. It appears to me wholly inconsistent with all the legislation on the subject, most dangerous to India, and degrading to the Indian Council, and likely, in the present case, to tend to the worst results.

In the first place, it is wholly inconsistent with all the legislation on the subject. Not a word is to be found in any of the statutes relating to the Government of India which countenances the popular distinction between the Executive Council and the Legislative Council. There is but one council, which sits sometimes for executive, and at other times for legislative purposes; nor is it possible to find a trace of any distinction between the duties attached to the position of the members of the Council on these occasions. In each case the members are to vote, in each case the Governor-General or the member who presides in his absence is, in case of an equal division of opinion, to have a casting vote. In the case of the meetings for executive purposes anxious provision is made for the case of a difference of opinion between the Governor-General and the members of Council. By several statutes, the Governor-General is empowered to overrule his Council in cases in which, in his opinion, the safety, tranquillity, or interest of the British possessions in India are essentially affected. The earliest of these statutes dates from the last century, and was enacted in consequence of the quarrels between Warren Hastings and his Council. A similar provision is contained in the Act of 1883 (3 and 4 Will. IV, c. 85, section 49); and a still later Act, passed in 1870 (33 Vic. c. 3), is to much the same effect. These Acts contain provisions as to the way in which the views of the Council or of the members who dissent are to be recorded. Nothing could show more distinctly how careful the Legislature has been at once to protect the independence of the ordinary members of the Council and to prevent the exercise of that independent judgment from paralysing the administration, as Francis and his colleagues for a considerable time paralysed the administration of Hastings. Is it conceivable that Parliament should have provided so elaborately for the independence of the ordinary members of the Council in regard to executive business, and that in regard to legislation they should have intended the very same persons to give silent votes in favour of measures which they disapprove, or to abstain from voting altogether?

This question appears to answer itself, but if any doubt upon it exists it is removed by the circumstance that the Viceroy is armed with a power of legislating in special cases exactly analogous to his power of overruling his Council in executive matters. This is done by section 23 of the Indian Councils Act, which empowers him "in case of emergency" to make "ordinances for the peace and good government of the said territories or any part thereof," which are to have the force of law for six months. The fact that such a power is vested in the Viceroy in order to enable him personally to provide for cases of emergency shows that it was intended that in cases which could not be so described the responsibility of legislation should rest upon the Council and on each individual member of it.

The only reason which can be alleged for the contrary opinion is that the Executive Council is of the nature of a Cabinet, the Legislative Council of the nature of a Parliament, and that the members of a Cabinet ought to vote together on important questions, whatever may be their private opinions, unless, indeed, they are prepared to resign. This view of the case rests upon a complete fallacy. The relation between the Cabinet and the House of Commons is one of the peculiarities of the English Constitution; it arises out of the system of parliamentary and party government, and has no meaning except in connection with it. Where a body of men are appointed by Parliament to conduct the executive government of the country upon certain principles it is obvious that they must hold together and that if one of them differs from his associates he must leave them; but where a body of officials are invested by statute law with certain definite powers, under circumstances which show that difference of opinion was contemplated, that provision was made for the event of their occurrence, and that resignation was not regarded as practically possible, it is clear that the duty laid upon each and every one of these officials is that of giving his own genuine opinion upon the various measures brought under his consideration.

To sum up the whole matter in a very few words, the Constitution of British India under the various Acts of Parliament which regulate the matter appear to be as follows:—India is governed for all purposes, executive and legislative, by the Viceroy in Council. All matters, whether executive or legislative, are to be determined by the votes of the majority, the Viceroy in each case having, in case of equality, a casting vote, and his express consent being necessary to the validity of legislative Acts. In cases of emergency the Viceroy may in executive business overrule his Council. He may also, on his own authority, make ordinances, having the force of law, to last for six months, but subject to these powers it is the duty of every member of his Council, whether he is an ordinary member, entitled to be present at all its meetings, or an additional member, entitled to be present at meetings for the purpose of legislation only, to vote according to his own judgment on every matter, whether executive or legislative, which is brought before him.

The reason for putting these matters so prominently forward is that it has been stated, with the greatest distinctness and in the most positive manner, that several of the ordinary members of the Council are opposed to the Ilbert Bill, but intend, in deference to the mistaken notion to which I have referred, to vote in its favour. If the report in question is correct, and if such votes are given, it appears to me that those who give them will make a great mistake, and lose the opportunity of settling a most unpleasant question in a permanently satisfactory way. Their legal right to vote according to their real opinions, is indisputable. It is impossible to suppose that any evil will befall them if they do so. No Secretary of State would dare to displace a member of Council for voting this way or that way on a legislative measure. To do so would be a usurpation of authority which would not be tolerated, for it would be in direct opposition to the Indian Councils Act, and it would imply a determination on the part of the Secretary of State to reduce the Government of India to the position of mere ciphers. On the other hand, if the members of the Council should think that the Ilbert Bill ought to be thrown out, and should act upon that conviction by voting against it, they would do a service to India, and, in particular, to the home Government, if not to Lord Ripon himself, of the most important kind. In that event the whole of the foolish and violent controversy which has so long agitated India would be brought to an end. Lord Ripon would be extricated without any loss of dignity or consistency from a thoroughly false position, and matters would fall back into the quiet state in which they were two years ago, when this ill-advised scheme was first started. A few agitators only would be disappointed. Surely, this would be the very best solution which could be given of a problem which it is difficult to solve in any other satisfactory way, as the Government consider it impossible to withdraw a Bill which, as is now universally admitted, it was a great mistake to introduce.—Times.

LIBERAL JOURNALISM AGAIN.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "DAILY TELEGRAPH."

SIR,—Your contemporary has been posing for some time as a friend of India, and has written either in ignorance of his subject, or inserted others' writings of the like character. I have tried to set him right; but he is as infallible as the Pope. Last Tuesday he had an article on Lord Ripon's policy, full of scorn of all who differed from Lord Ripon or himself. I replied to that article, and after some consideration he inserted the letter, with an editorial note, to which the following is a reply. Being unable otherwise to deal with it, after several days' incubation, he "declines to insert Mr. Wilson's letter abusing us, because we think the Ilbert Bill just, and his opposition to it mistaken." And yet he can neither disprove my facts, nor refute my arguments based upon them. It suits him further to say that "Mr. Wilson has lost his temper, and says things which we do him the justice to believe he would hardly in his calmer moments like to see in print." This is another misrepresentation.

Neither the treacle nor the brimstone will do. The temper that is lost is not mine, and in calmness I have no objection to see printed what was in calmness written, because I know it is true, and that the editor of the Independent cannot refuse it. The sage who now is supposed to preside over the misfortunes of that paper has probably found out his mistake about the "power of blundering," which his far greater parent failed to recognise during many years. In his clumsy attempt to hit me he struck his parent, and he prefers not to try again. The best plan is not to print the letter, and yet he cannot forbear a wail of anguish at the thought that the opinions of even a "blundering" writer will be welcome elsewhere.

Thus far I have managed to survive insults from various quarters; but neither insults nor compliments will avail to deter me from condemning any Bill introduced or supported by any party which I consider to be a delusion of the people of India, offered under the pretence of a boon.

JAMES WILSON.

TO THE EDITOR OF THE "INDEPENDENT."

SIR,—It is said that when a man is under correction it is difficult to hit him in the right place. On a recent occasion I challenged you to show that the Ilbert Bill would benefit a single native of India to the extent of a sixpence, notwithstanding that you advocate it in the interests of the millions of India. You replied that I took only a narrow view of the subject, and could see nothing in it but a question of magistrates' salaries. This subject does not arise under the Bill, and I never mentioned it. Now you change the ground—my views are too broad, and outside the Bill. I say that the Bill, from the point of view of native interests, is a contemptible measure, and is a practical fraud or delusion of the people of India.

In replying to your article of Tuesday last I did not go far beyond the text, though I did not, any more than yourself, confine my remarks to the Ilbert Bill. I did not allude to anything that you had not touched upon, except the Rent Bill, and even that fairly arises from the claim made that we are to legislate justly in the interest of the millions. That is just what I am contending for; but I want the legislation to be real, and for the millions; not a delusion that will never benefit them to the value of a sixpence.

Then we had the "Queen's gracious promise" that no one should be debarred employment on account of race or birth. I showed that this is a false statement in fact, as the children of Englishmen born in India are the only people so debarred, and there is no law or order to prevent the natives being so employed, and in fact that nearly two millions of natives are even now in the employment of the Government of India. This subject is too large for you, just as my other views were too narrow. Mr. Mundella at his meeting spoke of the great things that were being done in India in the development of public works. But he did not tell his audience that if they were resident in India their children would be forbidden employment on these works, because they are the children of Englishmen. There are many men settled in India of a similar character to Mr. E. Memmott and Mr. W. Rolley. Mr. Atkins is one of them. He married there, and has several children. These children are debarred employment in the Public Works Department, "on account of race, birth, &c.," the Queen's gracious promise notwithstanding. So would the children of Mr. Memmott and Mr. Rolley. You say this may be a just grievance. There is no "may" about it. But it is not my grievance. I only adduce it to show the hollowness of the pretence about the gracious promise, and the false claims made under this pretence. Even in this matter you cannot or do not wish to see my true position. You say I "set myself blindly against the removal of the grievances of other Queen's subjects quite as loyal as myself, only of a different colour." This is not correct. I do not and never have opposed anything that the natives claim in the nature of a grievance. There is no right, privilege, or immunity enjoyed by Englishmen in India that I am not prepared to concede to the natives, short of absolutely governing the country so long as we possess it. I even concede their right to drive us out of it, leaving the responsibility of its being done or not to our own Government, whether by means of gracious promises or by the army, navy, and volunteers, who are so toasted at every feast. Here, then, is another of your misrepresentations. I have always opposed the Ilbert Bill in the interests of the people of India. I shall continue to do so until I see better cause to change my opinion. I look upon the Ilbert Bill, whether it is passed or not into an Act, as the greatest calamity that has befallen India since the Mutiny. If I have opposed the Ilbert Bill in the interests of Englishmen, it has not been in their favour as against the natives, as you more than insinuate; but merely as incidental evils, but still serious ones from the Englishman's point of view.

You take Dr. Hunter as a great authority. I know Dr. Hunter. He first fadged his literary wings in India in the Indian Daily News. His connection with it and his leaving it were both perfectly honourable.

For his subsequent employment I am in no way responsible. I can only say that but few men on such limited administrative experience have been placed in the Viceregal Council. You quote his authority. He names Mr. Whitley Stokes as an ex-legal member of the Council who is in favour of the Bill. You would see from the Times of the 12th or 13th inst., that Mr. Stokes repudiates the imputation, and is opposed to the bill. You quote Sir Ashley Eden, an ex-Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal, against Mr. Thompson, who has only just entered upon his office. You would thus make it appear that Mr. Thompson is about as ignorant of India as is Lord Ripon or Mr. Ilbert—the only two who were in favour of the bill when introduced to notice. The fact is that Mr. Thompson is one of the oldest, ablest, and most experienced members of the Civil Service, of far larger administrative experience than Sir Ashley Eden, and even the latter has repudiated what has been imputed to him with regard to the bill. Mr. Thompson, moreover, is, and always has been, one of the best friends of the natives that India has ever had.

Another thing is that I am said to find it difficult to be consistent, or to have an inveterate power of blundering. This is a poor compliment to the editorial judgment of the Independent, for, during a period now approaching thirty years, my "blunders" have always been acceptable to the Independent, as during that time only one of my productions has been refused insertion, and that because you found that the only possible method of dealing with the "blunders." I suppose it is in this connection that I am supposed to be responsible for what you call the "rattling" of the Indian Daily News. If that is what you intended, I can only say that the intention is mean and cowardly, because you know that when this question arose I had been a long time out of India, and I could not have influenced the opinions in any way. The facts here again are simple, distort them as you may. The Ilbert Bill was introduced, if I may say it without offence, in a Jesuitical way. It was put forth on false pretences and facts that were untrue. In the presence of that light, the acting editor accepted the bill as a fair one. But, in the course of a day or two, when he found that the facts were false, that the reasons assigned for the Bill did not exist, he, like an honest man, preferred truth to consistency, an example which might be followed with advantage by the Press at home.

I have known the Editor of the Independent make speeches in Paradise-square against national education when that measure was advocated by Robert Slater Bayley, Thomas Dunn, and others. I have seen columns upon columns on the same subject in the same paper for years together, when, along with Sir E. Baines and his party, the Independent helped to delay the possible passing of an Education Act for a quarter of a century. When did the Independent "rat" on that question? When he found that the facts were adverse to the cause he had hindered for years. There could be other Bank-street "rats," unearthed, but I see no reason for preferring a false position to a true one when the truth is known. There are people who prefer to call themselves consistent; but I am not one of them, when there are higher virtues than consistency, and I believe that the gentleman who now conducts the Indian Daily News also holds the same view, or he would have to look out for another post.

As to my "trotting at the heels of Mr. Atkins a paid delegate," I have not sinned grievously in this respect (having only stood on one platform with him), not more so than Mr. John Bright, who has been "trotting at the heels of Mr. Lal Mohun Ghose, a paid delegate." I have known Richard Cobden, John Bright, and others whom I could name, trot a good deal at each other's heels as paid delegates. The difference in my own case is that I have done very little trotting, and what I have done, or may do, I shall do in what I believe to be the interests of the people of India, with a view to save them, if possible, from being deluded by their friends, either through ignorance or from the exigencies of party warfare.

THE FIGOT-HASTIE AFFAIR.—Investigations into the charges brought against Bahadur Kali Churn Bannerjee, in connection with the Figot v. Hastie defamation case, have been laboriously and searchingly carried on by the Free Church Presbytery of Calcutta, as the ecclesiastical body to which Mr. Bannerjee was responsible. These investigations were brought to a close on Tuesday evening, Nov. 27; and would have been much earlier, were it not for most frivolous evidence submitted, which had little or nothing to do with the case. One thing made every patent in the course of the investigations was that Mr. Bannerjee has enemies, even among the comparatively small Christian community to which he belongs—men who appear to be jealous of the power and influence which he has of late been exercising over the minds and actions of so large a body of his countrymen."—Indian Daily News.

MR. BERTRAM CURRIE LAYS IT ON WITH A MOP.

MR. GLADSTONE'S appointment of Mr. Bertram Currie as a Member of the Secretary of State's Council at the India Office, was one of the most distinguished jobs of a Government that had already attained unparelled pre-eminence in the art of jobbery. And now, in return, Mr. Currie's adulation of Mr. Gladstone, in the unveiling ceremony last Friday, at the City Liberal Club, is on a scale truly Liberal. Mr. Currie ransacked the English language to find terms worthy of his great subject, and failed; and so had nothing for it but to turn round and abuse all those who differed from him in regard to Mr. Gladstone's merits, and Mr. Gladstone's precise position in the solar system and the universe. Considering that Mr. Currie is a paid member of the Civil Service, and one that occupies the somewhat invidious position of having been put into high office over the heads of those who have borne the burden and heat of the day, apparently for no other reason than his sound Liberal politics, it surely was hardly in good taste for him to refer to the Beaconsfield Ministry as "rash and reckless men." And indeed, from the terms in which Conservatives throughout are spoken of, it may be taken for granted that Mr. Currie will retire from the Indian Council at the next change of Ministry, as he could hardly work under a Conservative Secretary of State, or Under Secretary, after describing them in such terms. What a wretched Americanising of our system this is! Here we shall have had a thick-and-thin partisan, holding permanent high office under a Ministry of his own political kidney, and then retiring when the other side come in! Colonel Yule probably looks upon the Indian Council much as Colonel Newcome would have looked upon it, as a conclave far too reverend in its character for the Yankee tricks, of which we know quite enough on the other side of the Atlantic;

so it is not surprising that Colonel Yule should write to the Times to protest against Mr. Currie's fulsome adulation and insolent abuse.

Even Mr. Currie, when he read the proceedings the next morning in the Times, and the sarcastic reference to his "glowing periods," must have felt just a dawn of suspicion as to whether he had not laid on his colours with too free a brush; and a careful perusal of Lord Granville's two little speeches might have confirmed this suspicion. Poor Lord Granville, whose age is not kindly treated by such ceremonies as this and that of the Aquarium dinner last year, evidently winced terribly at Mr. Bertram Currie's somewhat unhappy quotation of the maxim "No man is a hero in the eyes of his valet." Of course, Mr. Currie explained this after the Radical fashion—that it was all the fault of the valet, from whom you could expect nothing better than the coarse, low mind of a menial; and consequently he was able to show that himself and Lord Granville could not possibly be Mr. Gladstone's valets, seeing that Mr. Gladstone was a hero in their eyes. Lord Granville, however, was not sufficiently grateful for this proof, so satisfactory to Mr. Currie. He spitefully observed that the valet was "somewhat unkindly treated by Mr. Currie;" he declared that we all knew too much about Mr. Gladstone to need that any one should expatiate at such length on his virtues; and finally—most unkind cut of all—the noble Earl told Mr. Currie and the worthy folk of the City Liberal Club, "however complimentary your words may be to Mr. Gladstone himself, or to such inferior politician as myself, we prefer to any civil words the promise of securing us a larger parliamentary support." Mr. Currie's ardour, however, was not to be damped by Lord Granville's sarcasms; for after the proceedings had terminated, a telegram was sent to the Premier "at the suggestion of Lord Granville," in which we get some more of Mr. Currie's "glowing periods." The telegram ran as follows:—

"The Gladstone Statue Committee, City Liberal Club, Walbrook.—To the Right Hon. W. E. Gladstone, Hawarden Castle.—The inauguration of your statue at the City Liberal Club this afternoon has, in every way, been a great success. The speech of Mr. Currie, who unveiled the statue, was very eloquent and effective, and the enthusiasm of those present for yourself and the Liberal party was unbounded. Earl Granville's speech also gave great satisfaction, and there were numerous and most hearty expressions of goodwill towards yourself and the cause of which you are the trusted leader."

This was very neat, and paid off Lord Granville for his sneer about the valet. But the whole business seems to us to be a serious innovation on the principles of the English Permanent Civil Service; and if this sort of thing goes on, every public official will soon be considered bound not only to subscribe his own scanty earnings, but also to constitute himself a nuisance to all his friends, in order to supply the country with a sufficient number of copies of busts of Mr. Gladstone, or photographs of Mr. Chamberlain, or other equally laudable objects.

The number of men who have extended their service in India by accepting the bounty stood as follows on Nov. 15:—Artillery, 1,304; Cavalry, 401; Royal Engineers, 34; and Infantry, 4,538—in all, 6,277.

The following promotions have been made, subject to the approval of Government in the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles:—Lieut. G. S. Bomwetsch to be Captain, and Lance Corporal C. V. McL. Pritchard to be Lieutenant, both in the headquarters (Cadet Company).

CORRESPONDENCE.

RAILWAY BRIDGES.

SIR,—I was asked the other day how soldiers are to be supplied for garrisoning bridge-heads; if large railway bridges are to be fortified, in most parts of India the landowners must be made responsible. The Commander in Chief would state what force is required, and landowners within a certain distance of the bridge would have to furnish the men, and be responsible for their good conduct. During a time of peace a portion only of the garrison need be on duty, relieving each other monthly, and their pay would be small, fourpence a day while on duty would usually suffice; in times of war they would receive the pay of sepoy; the landowners would add to their pay in order to secure faithful and valiant men.

What a pity it is that the Indian Government and the directors of Indian railways do not encourage the sale of photographs of some of our magnificent bridges, truly works of art. There are more than fourteen railway bridges in India, regarding the construction of which the nation ought to feel proud. Look at Turnbull's wonderful bridge, a mile in length across the Sone or Golden River; it used formerly to be a heavy day's journey for our regiments to cross the three miles of dangerous sands, where no firm bottom could be found sixty feet below the water.

As Turnbull's was one of the first, so is the Attock bridge the latest of these grand works. From the times of Sesostris, Darius, Alexander the Great, up to the present, no nation has been able until now to bridge the Indus permanently; that mighty volume of water rushing between rocks is appropriately called the Sindhu, which means the sea; as useful a barrier against barbarian invaders, with their hosts of cavalry, as the English Channel has been for England's safety.

In India wonderful bridges now span the Chenab, the Sutlej (the river of a hundred channels), the Ganges, the Jumna, the Nerbudda (rendering soft), and the Tapti (the heated), and we hope soon to hear that the lower Godavari has been bridged near Chinnoor.

Our fourteen great bridges over nine rivers are worth much more than five millions sterling, and can be efficiently protected at an extra cost of £10,000 a year in a time of peace, and of £50,000 in times of war. Surely, it is worth while to pay one per cent to insure the safety of our bridges 2,000 and 3,000 feet in length.

At each bridge-end should be placed a Woolwich infant, nursed by an English officer and English gunners. The destruction of two or three of the fourteen bridges would necessitate the sending out from England of many additional steam engines, and of hundreds of railway waggons. Your obedient servant,

Dec. 17.

Hospital accommodation for officers has been provided at Devonport, Dublin, Netley, Woolwich, Gibraltar, Malta, and Natal.

The Calcutta Volunteer Rifle Corps marched to St. John's Church on Sunday last for Divine Service. There was a very good muster, 462 of all ranks being present. The Rev. Mr. Bray officiated.

MAIL NEWS.

The visit of their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, to Bombay, came to a close on Saturday, Nov. 24. On Friday the Duke spent a quiet day in visiting privately the Crawford Market, the School of Arts, and several other public institutions, and in the evening a grand ball was given in honour of the Royal visitors at Government House.

On Saturday, Nov. 24, the Duke visited the Prince's Dock, and in the evening the Royal pair left by special train for Ahmedabad, en route for Meerut.

On arrival at Ahmedabad on Sunday morning, Nov. 25, an address of welcome was presented by the Municipality of the city, and his Royal Highness briefly replied. The Royal party left Ahmedabad by special train the same morning, and arrived at Meerut on Monday evening, Nov. 26.

A notification has been issued by the Bombay Government expressing the warm acknowledgments of their Royal Highnesses for the cordiality of their reception in Bombay.

Active preparations are being made in Calcutta for the reception of the Duke and Duchess on the occasion of their visit to the city to attend the opening of the Calcutta Exhibition.

The Viceroy and party reached Rawal Pindi from Murree on Friday, Nov. 23, and left again the same day for Lahore, arriving at that city early on the following morning. His Excellency had a Levee at noon on Saturday, Nov. 24, and there was a conversation in the evening.

On Sunday night, Nov. 25, the Viceroy went to Chunga-manga on a shooting expedition and had very good sport. His Excellency returned to Lahore on Monday evening, and left by special train for Allahabad at 2 p.m. on Tuesday, Nov. 27.

An agent has arrived at Lahore from Cabul bearing a message from the Ameer to the Viceroy and a present of ten thousand pomegranates.

Owing to the backwardness of the arrangements at the Calcutta Exhibition, it was rumoured early in the week that the opening day would be postponed. It was, however, decided that no change should be made in the original arrangements, and, according to the official programme which has been published, the ceremony will take place on the 4th proximo in the presence of H. E. the Viceroy, their Royal Highnesses the Duke and Duchess of Connaught, her Excellency the Marchioness of Ripon, the Governor of Bombay, the Lieutenant Governor of Bengal, and a large number of native princes and European officials.

H. E. Sir James Fergusson left Bombay for Calcutta on Nov. 30.

The agitation against the Ilbert Bill has been continued with renewed vigour during the past week. Meetings have been held at Simla, Ramchee, Bhaugulpore, Naini Tal, Bishnath, Kurseong and Muzafferpore to protest against the modified measure as sketched by Lord Northbrook in his speech at Bristol.

It is stated, apparently on good authority, that his Excellency the Viceroy does not intend to defer proceeding with the Ilbert Bill until Parliament next meets.

H. E. Sir James Fergusson presided at a meeting in Bombay on Wednesday, Nov. 28, for the purpose of inaugurating the Bombay centre of the St. John Ambulance Association.

H. E. General Hardinge left Bombay on Wednesday, Nov. 28, by steamer for Honore on a tour of inspection.

King Theebaw being determined to make an effort to subdue the rebellious Shan Chiefs has despatched five thousand troops to the Shan States under the command of four generals, accompanied by several Italians in the King's service.

The charge of defamation brought against Mr. Robert Knight, the editor of the Statesman by Messrs. Roberts, Morgan, and Co., solicitors of Calcutta, has been withdrawn on the defendant's counsel making a statement, disclaiming any intention of imputing that the plaintiffs had concocted or suggested the evidence of Mr. Fish in the Pigot-Hastie case, the comments on which formed the subject of the libel.

An appeal is shortly to be preferred by Miss Pigot against the decision of Mr. Justice Norris in the action Pigot v. Hastie, which has caused so much excitement in Calcutta.

The Free Church Presbytery of Calcutta have passed a resolution, expressing an opinion that there is no foundation for the charges of which Mr. K. C. Bannerjee was adjudged guilty by Mr. Justice Norris's judgment in the Pigot-Hastie case.

From the district reports for Bengal for the week ended Nov. 17, it is evident that, in the greater part of the province, the late rice crop will be almost a total failure, which unless rain falls soon upon the cold weather crops must also prove very deficient.

The Bengal Government has sanctioned the expenditure of Rs. 10,000 on relief works in some of the villages already suffering from scarcity in the north of Tirhoot, and Mr. Halliday, the commissioner, has gone to the district on a tour of inspection, and to organise the work.

Jesse Smith, a seaman belonging to H.M.S. Euraylus, died at the European General Hospital, Bombay, on Monday night, from the effects of injuries inflicted upon him in a drunken brawl at the Sailors' Home on Saturday night. A merchant seaman, named Littlewood, is in custody on a charge of causing the deceased's death.

The Hyderabad Races were brought to a close on Saturday, Nov. 24, after a very successful meeting.

Mr. Woolcott, veterinary surgeon, was killed on Friday, Nov. 23, at Calcutta, by a fall from his horse while taking part in a paper chase.

Mr. Wilfrid and Lady Anne Blunt arrived in Madras on Nov. 17 from Tanjore.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

Major and Brevet Lieut. Colonel John Free, 7-1 Northern Division, who received his brevet for service in Egypt, and who was for a long time with the Horse Artillery, at Mhow, has been directed to proceed to England to join the M Battery, A Brigade, Royal Horse Artillery, Dublin.

Major J. F. S. Mackenzie, deputy accountant general, Military Department, returned to the Presidency from Simla on the 23rd inst.

Major F. H. Jackson, assistant to the Governor General's Agent at Baroda and superintendent of the Gaekwar's Contingent in Kattywar, has been appointed to act for Major General J. Watson, C.B., V.C., during the latter's absence on privilege leave.

Major A. Landon, lately officiating second in command, 17th N.I., will do duty at Benares.

Major Frederick Lawrence Haleson, Madras Staff Corps, has been replaced on the effective list from the Staff Corps, half-pay list.

It is stated that Major H. H. P. Cowper, Military Accountant Department, proceeds to Madras for duty on return from leave to England.

Majors Phillips and Stopford, 2nd Bombay Light Cavalry and 1st Sind Horse, respectively, are permitted to exchange.

Captain Phillips, 1st Royal Irish Regiment, has been selected for the adjutancy of the 4th Militia Battalion of his regiment, and proceeds home immediately to take up the appointment.

Captain E. Lloyd, Bengal Staff Corps, has completed the Staff College Regulation course and returned to India.

It is stated that Captain Montgomery, Army Pay Department, with the 10th Hussars, will proceed to England on one year's leave, as under the new rule he cannot accompany his present regiment home, he having less than five years' service as a paymaster in India. He will therefore be transferred of another corps for duty.

Captain W. J. Fowler, R.A., proceeds from Campbellpore to Meerut for duty with the Royal Artillery at that station.

Lieutenant C. G. M. Fasken, Adjutant 2nd Sikh Infantry, is proceeding on furlough out of India for one year, embarking at Bombay.

Lieutenant H. Croley, of the Nilgiri Volunteer Rifles, has been permitted to resign his commission at his own request.

The services of Lieutenant Cecil Sydney de Butts Martindale, 5th Ghorkhas, have been placed at the disposal of the Government of the Punjab, for employment in the Punjab Commission.

Lieutenant A. B. Anderson, Bombay Volunteer Rifles, has been attached to A Company, Calcutta Volunteer Rifles, for duty, at his own request.

Lieutenant F. R. MacMullen, Wiltshire Regiment, having been granted twelve months' leave to England, has vacated his probationary appointment in the 3rd Bengal Cavalry.

Lieutenant William Barnard Broughton 2nd Battalion

Dorsetshire Regiment, is about to join the Army Pay Department. He is a subaltern of over 17 years' service.

Surgeon Major J. Aitchison, lately Officiating Secretary to the Surgeon General of the British Forces, is posted to the Sirhind Division for duty. Surgeons B. M. Skinner and F. J. Lambkin will do duty at Peshawar and Allahabad respectively.

Surgeon J. W. Jerome, on arrival from England, will go to Jubbulpore for duty instead of Morar, as previously ordered.

The services of Surgeon C.G.W. Lowdell, Indian Medical Department, Bombay, have been replaced at the disposal of the Military Department.

An adjutant of artillery has been sanctioned for the Quetta command.

The Mountain Battery, No. 9 Battery, Northern Division, proceeding to Quetta from the Murree Hills, has been permanently struck off the strength of the Bengal Presidency, and taken on the strength of Bombay.

The 2nd Battalion Somerset Light Infantry (late 13th Light Infantry), stationed at Kamptee, are under orders to sail for Rangoon early next month. They are now over 400 below their strength, and will lose 70 or 80 invalids and time-expired men before they embark. No draft seems to be under orders to bring them up to their proper strength; their 1st Battalion, or Brigade Depot, cannot supply the regiment with men. The regiment has been quartered in Kamptee, a very hot station, for four years, and in 1881 and 1883 had to move into camp during the rains to escape cholera. For the last two months their hospital has been crowded with sick.

The 3rd Battery 1st Brigade, Scottish Division Royal Artillery, under the command of Major Price, arrived at Fort William on the 23rd November, at which place it remains in garrison.

The Government of India have sanctioned the establishment of a treasure chest at Cherat, to be located in the quarter-guard, and to be under the charge of an officer of the garrison.

The medal for the best shot among the Volunteers in Bengal is reported to have been awarded to Sergeant Johnson, 3rd Sind-Punjab and Indus Valley Railway Volunteer Rifle Corps, for a score of 226 points! Out of the h. p. s. of 240.

The Governor General in Council has been pleased to sanction the formation of a Volunteer Rifle Corps at Purneah, forty-one members having been enrolled; this number will entitle the company to a captain and two lieutenants.

The Calcutta Volunteer Rifle Corps parade on Nov. 28, was very well attended; ten companies, varying in strength from ten files to twenty-five files, marching past in open column of companies, at quarter distance and at the double. The Mounted Infantry and Naval battery form quite a feature on parade, and cause many visitors to attend that otherwise would not.

The 1st and 3rd Punjab Volunteers have set an example which their brothers in arms throughout India would be pleased to see the Calcutta Corps follow on the Viceroy's arrival at the capital. When Lord Ripon arrived at Lahore the other day, these regiments furnished an exceptionally strong guard of honour.

The Governor General in Council has sanctioned the formation of a Volunteer Corps at Cossipore, leaving it to the gentlemen who have come forward to join the corps to decide among themselves whether they desire to form an artillery or infantry corps; and in the latter case whether they would prefer to be a corps of the Administrative Battalion, or a company of the Calcutta Volunteer Rifles.

The 2nd Administrative Battalion of Volunteers in the North-West Provinces has been divided into two half battalions, by which arrangement the company at Meerut will be transferred from Agra to the Mussoorie Corps.

It has been ruled that officers of the Indian Army proceeding to, or returning from, the Staff College, should be treated in the same manner as officers going to England on furlough, that is, they should receive the half staff pay of their appointments from the date of leaving their regiments until the date of embarkation; and on return from the College, from the date of arrival in India to the date of rejoining their regiment.

Under instructions from His Royal Highness the Field Marshal Commanding in Chief, officers commanding regiments of British Cavalry and Infantry are directed to return, at once, to the Adjutant-General to the Forces, Horse Guards, in registered packets, all the unissued Egyptian Bronze Stars which are now in their possession.

The committee appointed to revise the dress of the Bengal Cavalry regiments has finished its sittings, and the Lahore paper believes that the main recommendations made are as follow:—That the number of colours be reduced from seven to three, khaki, blue, and scarlet: that the uniforms of the officers of each regiment should consist of two suits only, a lightly braided parade jacket to take the place of the tunic and patrol jacket, and the mess jacket so modified as to be convertible into full dress when required; also that the braiding of all the regiments should be similar, so that even if an officer changed from a blue to a scarlet regiment, he could still utilise his gold lace on his new uniform. The inexpensive blouse would, of course, be retained by all regiments that desired it. The cost of the complete revised uniform—not including accoutrements—should not exceed Rs. 400 to Rs. 450.

SIR F. ROBERTS'S TOUR.—A telegram from Calcutta, Nov. 20, states:—His Excellency the Commander in Chief of Madras and Lady Roberts arrived at Beypore by mail train from Shoranore on Sunday afternoon. They were received at the platform by Mr. C. A. Galton, acting collector of Malabar, and were the guests of that gentleman at his residence on the West Hills, till Monday morning, when they proceeded to Tellicherry by transit conveyance. From Tellicherry Sir Frederick Roberts and Lady Roberts will go to Cannanore and Mangalore by sea. The Government steam tug Madras, with the Commander in Chief's Military Staff, also arrived at Beypore on Sunday morning last, and left the same evening for Cannanore.

CAPTAIN FRED BURNABY, Royal Horse Guards.Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cockle's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact,
the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him fiveCOCKLE'S PILLSwill never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fame as a 'medicine man' had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even then a theme of conversation in the bazaar."

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS"A quaint and unobtrusively clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarat, which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease.
His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their 'British

THE DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS.

W. THORNHILL & CO., Sole Agents.

The Reputation of the "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS," originally introduced into England by W. THORNHILL and CO., is now permanently established. The success of their enterprise has surpassed their most sanguine expectations. "DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS" afford the only instance hitherto attained of the absolutely perfect representation of the real diamonds by artificial means. These remarkable stones, by their purity and brilliancy, support comparison with diamonds of the first water, and are undistinguishable therefrom. They are infinitely superior in every respect to real diamonds of inferior quality. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS were exposed side by side with real diamonds of great value in the Paris Exhibition, 1878, and were awarded a Prize Medal and the highest recompense awarded to imitations. They attracted universal attention and admiration, and forthwith became much in vogue with the grande monde and élite of society. They are now worn at the Court balls, and upon all occasions in London, Paris, and St. Petersburg. They are invaluable for intermixing with and replacing parures and other costly diamond ornaments. DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS can be worn at all times, even by daylight, with confidence and absolute security. They possess the penetrating brilliancy and lustre peculiar to real diamonds, and the concessionaires guarantee the surprise and pleasure of purchasers. The perfection thus attained is the result of investigations and experiments extending over two generations. The cost, nevertheless, of the DIAMANTE BRILLIANTS is about 1-300th that of real diamonds.

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW
INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally be practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelligent interest in the welfare of our Indian Empire, comprising as it does 220 millions of our fellow-subjects.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

NOTES OF THE WEEK.

OUR advices by the overland mail are, from Bombay, Dec. 7; Madras and Allahabad, Dec. 5; Calcutta, Dec. 4.

WEARY of the incessant strife that seems to be the element necessary to Lord Ripon's happiness, most of our Anglo-Indian readers will hear of the Viceroy's contemplated attack on the Protestant Church in India with feelings of something very like dismay. When Lord Ripon was first nominated to the Viceroyalty, many of the organs of the Church of England in the Press declared that this would be the result of the appointment of a Roman Catholic to such an office. It was, however, pointed out, by ourselves and by others, that motives of delicacy would probably restrain a Roman Catholic Viceroy from such an indecent attack on a hostile Church. But, unfortunately, it appears that Lord Ripon is not troubled with an over-sensitive delicacy of feeling.

NEXT Saturday will see a most important meeting of the Bengal and Behar zemindars in Calcutta against the iniquitous Tenancy Bill. We issue a special supplement to-day, in order to place before the English public a full report of the last meeting, as well as a verbatim reprint of the last petition of the Zemindars to the Viceroy.

BUT the all-absorbing topic during the week among Anglo-Indians has been the astonishing "strategic movement to the rear" of the Government of India in the matter of the Ilbert Bill. We say "astonishing," because, though every one has been expecting that Lord Ripon would ultimately give way before the absolutely crushing weight of evidence against his mischievous crotchet, no one, we suppose, ever thought that the Viceroy would actually recede in the matter further than his foolish advance. But, in order to escape giving the exact "withdrawal" of the Bill that he has been asked for by his opponents, Lord Ripon now proposes to give back to the Anglo-Indian community that right of trial by jury, which they had somewhat imprudently surrendered in 1872, in return for the privilege lately threatened by the Ilbert Bill.

WE deal with this settlement in our leading columns to-day. After the tricky and unscrupulous way in which their rights have been trifled with during the last ten months, Anglo-Indians will take very good care that the settlement now made is ratified in such a solemn way, that there can be no room for any further such "little misunderstandings" as those which have been lately pressed against them by Lord Ripon, Mr. Ilbert, and Mr. Hunter.

THERE is no doubt about the advantage that has been gained by the return to the old form of English privilege, that of trial by jury, in regard to the stability of the new arrangements; and we venture to predict that no amount of "administrative inconvenience" will ever induce the Anglo-Indian community again to surrender the "Palladium of British liberties" as they did in 1872. For one of the prime difficulties of the Anglo-Indians in the recent controversy, in obtaining any appreciation from outsiders of the reality of the hardship inflicted on them by Lord Ripon, has consisted in the fact that the connection between "trial by jury," and "trial by countrymen," was not obvious to the ill-informed British public. It may safely be predicted that English public opinion will never listen to any proposals, on the part of any future Radical Viceroy, to rob Anglo-Indians of the simple and easily-comprehended right of trial by jury.

GENERAL SCOBELLEFF'S "Plan for the invasion of India," offers no novelty to those who have watched Central Asian politics with ordinary intelligence, and without the bias of Midlothian party spirit. It would, however, be interesting to hear Mr. Gladstone's explanation of this awkward document.

THE persistent opposition of the Times to the bi-metallists is a real misfortune to India. This is what appears in yesterday's money article:—

"There are some interesting remarks on the proposed repeal of the Bland Bill in the New York Commercial and Financial Chronicle of Dec. 8. Apparently the Chronicle has been won over by the bi-metallists, in so far as it seriously thinks that adequate pressure can be put on England to adopt the ratio of 15½ to 1 if the United States will only threaten to sell all the silver it produces. The following is the passage to which we refer:—'Another very encouraging indication this week has been the position Mr. Kelly has openly taken on the most important of all subjects—the silver question. He has changed his views, and not only frankly avows it, but announces his purpose of introducing and advocating a Bill to limit the coinage of silver to a nominal sum. Knowing Mr. Kelly's persistency and energy, we are inclined to hope for great results from his action. He places his opposition to continuing the coinage on the ground (so frequently urged by us when the Bland Bill was under discussion, and since then) that bi-metallism can only be secured through such a change of attitude on the part of the United States. So long as we absorb by coinage twenty-five millions of the silver production each year, England can afford to be indifferent to the question, because our action keeps that amount of bullion off the silver market, and not only helps to sustain the India exchange, but helps to give a steady basis for England's trade with all silver-currency countries. With our total production offered for sale, such a disturbance will be introduced into the manufacturing circles of Great Britain as will force the question upon the attention of that Government. Mr. Kelly might also have added that our rapidly increasing pile of dollars is further encouraging European non-action in the matter of bi-metallism, because it is everywhere acknowledged there, that if the process is much longer continued, it can only end in our falling into the line of silver nations, and in making us disgorge our gold and become a permanent absorbent of more than all our silver production. This is the explanation for the growing indifference all nations in Europe have of late shown to any action on this question. Even French ardour has cooled under the belief that out of our folly she will soon secure a dumping ground for her silver.'

"Such talk as this looks very incongruous in the sober pages of the Chronicle. The idea it expresses is not, of course, a new one. The wilder adherents of 'the immortal 15½,' as M. Cernuschi used to call it, some years ago suggested that France should sell her silver, and thus 'bring England to her knees.' The proposal was, of course, utterly childish, because France could not afford to indulge in so expensive a freak, even in the hope of annoying England. France cannot demonetise silver. She has too much of it, and her people like it. The people of the United States, on the other hand, have no liking for silver, or, indeed, for any metallic currency, and the banking interest is in favour of a gold standard. By all means let the United States Treasury get rid of the useless mass of bland dollars it now holds if it can, and, in any case, the Bland Act ought to be repealed. That Act was passed to please a clique that hold silver in large quantities, and was supported by the bi-metallists as a step towards 'rehabilitating the white metal.' The measure was a foolish one, and the inconveniences which result from providing a people with a currency that does not suit their habits are now being felt in the United States. The remedy for this is, fortunately, easy, but it must be adopted without any arrière pensée such as is suggested in the observations of the Chronicle. The United States economists must free themselves from the notion that they can at once reform their own currency and frighten us into adopting bimetalism. Supposing that the Indian exchanges on London were to decline, it would, no doubt, cause great inconvenience to our Eastern trade while the decline lasted, but when the lower level of silver values was once established, business would go on as usual. It is not the low price of silver, measured in gold, that causes bankers and merchants anxiety, but the fluctuations in that price which would be fully as annoying if the point round which the quotation oscillated were gold, as they are now that it is only silver. We are aware that the bi-metallists pretend that if their system were adopted universally it would put an end to fluctuations in the value of silver. No one can positively say that the result they predict would not follow, but no one who has realised the nature of the questions involved would confidently assert that it would do so. In any case, the end to be gained is not worth gaining at the cost of tampering with the basis of our present currency arrangements."

We deeply regret to announce the death of a veteran littérateur of Calcutta, Babu Pearychand Mitter, whose sterling qualities had endeared him to a large circle of friends, both Indian and English. During the seven years that Mr. Lethbridge was editor of the Calcutta Review, Mr. Pearychand Mitter was one of its most constant and valued contributors. We quote an appreciative obituary notice that appears in the Hindoo Patriot :—

"It is with deep sorrow we announce the death of Babu Pearychand Mitter, which melancholy event took place on the morning of Saturday last. In him the country loses a literary veteran, a devoted worker, a distinguished author, a clever wit, an earnest patriot, and an enthusiastic spiritual inquirer. Babu Pearychand Mitter was one of the early fruits of the old Hindu College, a contemporary of the Reverend K. M. Banerjee, the late Roy Huroohunder Ghose, the late Babus Russicklal Mullick, Radhanath Sikdar, Ramgopal Ghose, and others, who have left foot-prints on the sands of time. He early came under the notice of Sir Edward Ryan and Mr. Cameron. But he preferred commerce to Government service. He began operations on a small scale in conjunction with Babu Tarachand Chuckerbutty, the father of Young Bengal. Some years after he became Secretary to the Calcutta Public Library. This post gave him opportunity for study, and he devoted himself to literature. But he did not give up commercial business. From his early youth he was connected with the press; with Babu, since Rajah, Dukhinarunjun Mookerjee, he was associated in the conduct of the Gannemeshan, and with Babu Russickkrishna Mullick in that of the Spectator. He used to contribute to the columns of the Bengal Harkaru, the Englishman, the Indian Field and the Patriot. He was also a frequent contributor to the Calcutta Review. He worked with Mr. George Thompson, and was the first Secretary to the British India Society, which was established through the instrumentality of that eminent orator. He was also the first Secretary to the Bethune Society. He was a devoted admirer of David Hare, the father of Indian education, and on the death of that philanthropist, founded the Hare Anniversary which he held regularly on the 1st June of every year for the last forty years. He has also written the most readable biography of David Hare. On the abolition of the British India Society he joined the British Indian Association, of which he was one of the foundation members. Until a few years ago, when he was disabled by illness, he used to take an active part in the affairs of the British Indian Association. He was also a member of the Agri-Horticultural Society, in the interest of which he laboured hard and issued some useful publications. He was a member of the School-Book Society and Vernacular Literature Committee, a Fellow of the Calcutta University, and a Justice of the Peace and Honorary Magistrate. In 1866 or thereabouts he was appointed a member of the Bengal Legislative Council. The best memento of his connection with the local Legislature was the Act for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals which was passed at his instance. On the establishment of the Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals he was its first secretary, and then one of its Vice-Presidents. He was a member of the Municipal Corporation under the Act of 1863, and also for many years an active member of the District Charitable Society. He was not a registered Brahmo, but in faith he was a theist, and fraternised equally with Babu Dabendra Nath Tagore and Babu Keshub Chunder Sen. Latterly he became first a spiritualist, and then a theosophist. He wrote both in English and in Bengali on the subject of spiritualism. He was one of the founders of the Theosophic Society of Calcutta. Thus there was not a branch of public, national, and intellectual life, which did not interest Babu Pearychand Mitter and engage his services. But he will be best remembered for his labours in the field of Bengali literature. In common with that brilliant Bengali wit, the late Babu Kaliprosunno Sing, he introduced a species of light literature in the Bengali language, which now occupies a high place in it. His Alalar Ghorar Dulal is a model in its way. He has also written many other works in Bengali adapted to the study of ladies and also of the general public, some of which are of great merit. Although he numbered nearly three score and ten, his life was a continued line of a literary activity and public usefulness. In manners he was a gentleman, in spirit a cosmopolitan. His death leaves a chasm which cannot be easily filled up.

"The better feeling which we reported last week has not been of long duration, the demand has again become almost nominal and rates both by Canal and Cape are considerably easier. Only two steamers have taken the London berth during the week, whilst two vessels fixed for London, one for Mauritius and one for San Francisco. Our unfixed tonnage stands at about 45,000 tons."

We take the following obituary for the week ending Dec. 7, from the Times of India :—Mr. Thomas Douglas Griffith, Indigo Planter; Mr. J. Duncan, late Madras P.W.D.

Messrs. W. Moran and Co. give the following account of the Calcutta Tea Market for the week ending Dec. 4 :—

"The auctions held on the 29th ultimo comprised a total of 8,458 packages, all of which changed hands readily. The biddings were more than usually animated, and we believe this was due to the fact that some of the principal sellers had, knowing the wishes of the buying firms, arranged to sell most of their teas without reserve. Broken Pekoes, of good and fine quality, were about half an anna higher, and Pekoe Souchongs also showed an upward tendency."

We take from the same authority the following account of the Calcutta Indigo Market for the same period :—

"During the past week four Public Sales have been held, at which 4,000 chests were offered, and 3,538 chests were sold. There is very little change to notice in prices; good and fine qualities with good paste continue in very good demand, whilst rough-pasted, defective descriptions are not so much sought after, and realise somewhat lower rates in proportion. Good Oudes continue to command extreme prices, ordinary and low qualities closing rather easier. The total quantity disposed of now amounts to 53,000 maunds, against 40,000 maunds at the same date last year.

THE WEATHER AND THE CROPS.

The following is the official summary of the reports of the Agricultural Department on the state of the weather and prospects of the crops throughout India for the week ending Nov. 27 :—

"With the exception of the Madras Presidency and one district in Assam, no rain is reported for the past week from any of the reporting stations. The want of rain has involved to a large extent the failure of the rice crop in Bengal and has greatly retarded the rabi. In all other provinces the rabi prospects are fair, but the young crops in the North Western Provinces and Oudh require rain. The kharif harvest and rabi sowings have been nearly completed in the Bombay Presidency and Central and Northern India. Some damage is still caused by locusts in one district of Bombay, but the plague has generally abated. In Sindh the river continues low. The latest report received from Burma is for the week ending Nov. 17 and shows that the paddy crop promises a good yield in spite of some damage from past unfavourable weather. The public health is generally good, but slight cholera, small-pox, and fever exist in some provinces. Prices remain unchanged except in Bengal, where they are unsteady."

The Bengal report is as follows :—

"There has been no rain in any part of the province; the rice crop has, to a great extent, failed, and will be very poor; the prospects of the rabi crops also are generally reported to be very unfavourable; want of rain is very much felt for the progress of the rabi sowings, and for the growth of the crops already sown; prices are high all over the province; in some districts they are rising still; in some they remain stationary, and in others they are falling slightly; fever, as usual at this season, is prevalent in some districts, otherwise the public health is satisfactory."

TELEGRAPHIC INTELLIGENCE.

"The Ilbert Bill controversy has at last been happily settled, a compromise on the following terms having been arranged between the Government and the Anglo-Indian Defence Association :—

"No distinction will be made between European and native Sessions Judges, or district magistrates, as regards jurisdiction over European British subjects. But every European British subject who may be charged before a Sessions Judge or district magistrate will be entitled, whether such Session Judge or district magistrate be European or native, and whatever be the offence charged, to claim to be tried by a jury, the majority of whose members shall be his own countrymen. Ti right may be exercised even in districts to which the jury system has not yet been extended.

"The maximum sentence which a district magistrate may impose upon a European will be increased from three to six months' imprisonment."

"The leaders of the opposition consider this arrangement to be satisfactory, as it completely safeguards the liberties of Europeans by restoring to them their ancient constitutional right to trial by jury, of which they were partially deprived in 1872."

"For some days past rumours had been in circulation regarding the possibility of some satisfactory compromise of the Ilbert Bill difficulty being agreed upon. At first it was supposed that this compromise would take the form of an addition to the Bill of what is generally called the "optional" clause—that is, a clause reserving the right of European prisoners to claim a trial before a European judge or magistrate. That modification, the advantages of which I pointed out a week ago, would certainly have been accepted by the opposition, but early last week it became known that the Government had rejected it.

"All hope of a settlement did not, however, pass away, and it was with a feeling of profound relief that the news was received on Friday evening that the controversy which had been agitating the community for nearly eleven months had at last happily been laid at rest. I have already telegraphed a short outline of the terms agreed upon, and will now describe them in somewhat fuller detail.

"The compromise proceeds upon the basis of the modifications announced by Lord Northbrook at Bristol—that is to say, no native other than a sessions judge or magistrate of a district will have power to preside at the trial of a European British subject. But in every case in which a European British subject is charged with any offence outside the Presidency towns, and is brought before a sessions judge or district magistrate, the accused may, as of right, claim to be tried before a jury of whom not less than half shall be men of his own race. This provision will apply whether the judge or magistrate be a European or a native; but, as the jury must always consist of an odd number, it follows that the majority must be Europeans.

"At this point the proposal seemed likely to create a new anomaly. The European joint or deputy magistrate would still be able to try a European prisoner summarily, while his superior officer, the district magistrate, with no larger powers as to sentence, would be liable to be hampered with a jury whenever he tried a member of the dominant race. This difficulty was surmounted by the ingenious device of doubling the district magistrates' powers, and enabling them to pass a sentence of six months' imprisonment and a fine of Rs. 2,000, instead of one of three months and Rs. 1,000, as under the existing law. But as no similar anomaly would arise in the case of the sessions judges, it was unnecessary to make any change in the powers of those officers, which will remain as before, with twelve months' imprisonment as the maximum limit of the sentence. This doubling of the powers of the district magistrate is a point which the Europeans may safely concede, as they secure the trial by jury in return.

"Another feature in the compromise should be noted. There are many districts in India where the jury system has not been introduced. It will, however, be provided that in such districts European prisoners will have exactly the same right of claiming a jury as if the trial had been held in a jury district. And should it prove impossible to find in any district a sufficient number of European jurymen, it will be necessary either to transfer the case to another district, or to place the accused before a European joint or assistant magistrate, who can dispose of the case summarily, as under the existing law.

"There can be no doubt, then, that the measure, as thus modified, will completely safeguard the rights and liberties of European British subjects, and, in fact, put them in a better position than that which they have occupied since 1872. Its effect will practically be, that all petty charges brought against Europeans will be disposed of, as at present, by one of the European subordinate magistrates, of whom there must always be at least one in every district, while more serious cases, which are yet not sufficiently serious to be sent to the High Court, will be heard by a tribunal consisting of a European or native sessions judge, with, if the prisoner elect to claim it, a jury, the majority of whom will be Europeans.

"The Anglo-Indian Defence Association, acting on behalf of the European community, has wisely accepted this as a satisfactory settlement of the question, and there is little doubt that it will be so accepted by the great body of the public. It is true that one native newspaper, which has taken a prominent part in fomenting the anti-European agitation, has already denounced it as a surrender by the Government, and that some Europeans profess to regard it as a betrayal of principle on the part of the leaders of the opposition. But the vast majority of moderate men on both sides will probably hail with delight an arrangement which, if not very logical or symmetrical, has at least the advantage of putting the law on a firm and, it is to be hoped, a lasting basis, and of closing the most acrimonious controversy ever witnessed in British India.

"The Bill will be referred to a Select Committee at the meeting of the Legislative Council on January 4, and the Committee will proceed to put into formal shape the modifications described above. The measure will probably be passed at about the beginning of February.

"The Select Committee on the Bengal Tenancy Bill continues its deliberations, under the presidency of the Lieutenant Governor. The result has not been made public, but it is believed that every provision of the measure is being exhaustively discussed. It is now hardly likely that the Bill will reach its final stages during the current session. The zemindars are bestirring themselves somewhat more actively in their opposition, and have called a meeting in the Calcutta Town Hall for next Saturday.

"A long minute on the subject of crop prospects in Bengal was published in the Calcutta Gazette. Full details are given of the rainfall and state of crops in each division of the province. The general conclusions arrived at by the Lieutenant Governor are that, with a moderate rubbee, or cold-weather harvest, there is no reason to anticipate anything like a general scarcity. Prices may rule high; and in a few isolated localities in the north-east of Bengal, and possibly in a few portions of Behar it may be necessary to offer employment to the poorest classes, but such employment can be found easily on the lines of railway now under construction or sanctioned. The Lieutenant Governor trusts that nothing in the nature of charitable relief will be found necessary.

"A statistical conference is now being held in Calcutta, under the auspices of the Revenue and Agricultural Department, to consider the Secretary of State's request for fuller information on agricultural subjects. It is stated that many other important matters connected with the revenue and with agriculture will be dealt with by the conference.

"The advance force of the Akha Expedition, consisting of 150 men of the 43rd Native Infantry and 50 frontier police, crossed the frontier on the 17th inst. This force carries only twelve days' provisions, as the object is, by a rapid move on the Akha chiefs' village, to rescue the prisoners in his hands before the tribe can remove further into the interior.

"The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal continues to improve in health. Although he is still forbidden to leave the house, he has never ceased work for a day.

"The Nizam arrived here yesterday on a visit to the Exhibition. He was accompanied by several of his Ministers and a large suite.

THE following is another telegram from the Calcutta correspondent of the Times, dated Dec. 26:—

"Some months ago I informed you that Lord Ripon was believed to be contemplating a scheme for the revision and reduction of the establishment of the English Church in India. The Times of India now asserts that the disestablishment of the Church will be carried out immediately, although all the members of the Executive Council except Mr. Ilbert are against the proposed change, while of the additional members only Dr. Hunter supports it.

"I have valid authority for saying that this announcement is substantially correct. The pressure comes from the home Government, which apparently finds willing instruments in Lord Ripon and Mr. Ilbert. This policy, if persisted in, is sure to give rise to an agitation equal to that about the Ilbert Bill, and the fact of its being entrusted to a Roman Catholic Viceroy will add fuel to the flames.

"Mr. Wilfrid Blunt has arrived here, and has been warmly received by all classes of natives. The Indian Association has presented him with an address."

SELECTED ARTICLES.

THE ENGLISH PROVINCIAL PRESS ON THE ILBERT BILL SURRENDER.

THE utter collapse of Lord Ripon's Government on the Ilbert Bill has rather surprised Anglo-Indian authorities here. As the Times remarked the other day, instead of destroying anomalies, Lord Ripon has created an anomaly greater than any that yet existed in Indian procedure. Any European tried before a native magistrate can now demand a jury, and the majority on that jury must be men of his own race. The result will inevitably be that in remote country districts the European prisoner will simply be tried by seven of his intimate friends, and the chances of getting justice against him are reduced to a minimum, especially when the strong race antagonism excited by this ill-advised Ilbert Bill is taken into account.—Edinburgh Courant.

THE Calcutta Englishman states that a concordat has been arranged between the Indian Government and the Anglo-Indian Defence Association, according to which no native other than a district judge or magistrate shall exercise criminal jurisdiction over European British subjects, the latter being entitled as of right to trial by jury. It is further stipulated that the majority of jurors must be Englishmen, and that the right will be extended even to non injury districts. By securing this modification of the original Bill, the Anglo-Indian Defence Association have achieved a concession which may render the measure acceptable to all European residents, because, as now amended, it is practically unworkable. In every case they have the assurance that the justice of the verdict will be guaranteed by a majority of their own countrymen, who will see to it that their rights and liberties are not interfered with. There is another light in which to view the subject, however. In the more populous centres it will be comparatively easy to mpanel a jury in which intelligent Englishmen shall constitute a majority, but in some of the more remote districts the difficulty of bringing seven Englishmen together presents an obstacle which will make the carrying out of the bill a matter of the most extreme difficulty, if it does not render it wholly inoperative. The Indian Government are, however, apparently ready to stultify their own proposal, and run any risk in order to save their policy from a charge of defeat.—Birmingham Daily Gazette.

THE Ilbert Bill difficulty is to be settled by a compromise. The native sessions judges, or district magistrates, are to have jurisdiction over British subjects. But every British subject so charged will be entitled, whatever the alleged offence, to claim to be tried by a jury, the majority of whose members shall be his own countrymen. It is easy to foretell that the Act when it is passed will be practically inoperative. The sessions judges or district magistrates are few in number, and the cases that can come before them under the Act will be ridiculously few and far between. But whenever an Englishman is charged before a native, he will naturally demand an English jury. The privilege thus granted to a few native magistrates will exist therefore only on paper; the power conferred upon them will never be exercised. Was it worth while, for these barren honours, to lash the Anglo-Indian community into a fury of opposition and almost disloyalty? The Government must know that the Bill, as the Times puts it, "has been a gigantic mistake, a needless and wanton stirring up of strife more easy to excite than to appease." In the presence of "signs the meaning of which it is not possible to mistake, and the dangers of which it would have been most unsafe to disregard," the Bill ought, of course, to have been altogether and absolutely withdrawn. But that would have shown that the present Government is fallible, and with a political Pope at the head of affairs such an admission would be intolerable. Therefore the skeleton of the Bill is preserved, under conditions which will ensure its being left locked up in the cupboard. Ministers and their parrot-like followers will thus be able to boast that they refused to withdraw a measure of justice to the natives of India; but its opponents will be satisfied that it is no longer dangerous to the liberties of Englishmen in our Eastern Empire. The duplicity, the manoeuvring, the trickery by which its advocates sought to enforce it upon an unwilling people, will remain a lasting evidence of disgraceful party politics.—Bristol Times.

IT would have been better for all concerned, for the reputation of British rule and for the welfare of India, had the Government, in the matter of the Ilbert Bill, not boasted so inconsiderately, when they were buckling on the harness. The Bill must pass, they declared—the Bill, the whole Bill, and nothing but the Bill. It was absolutely necessary; it was imperative! In England, the party leaders refused to yield a foot; and the party organisations, which control the party leaders, proclaimed disaster, and Heaven knows what! should an inch be foregone. And in this spirit an agitation has been worked up in India much to the public discomfort and danger. In spite of all their protestations, however, the Government have been giving way, step by step. According to a telegram from Calcutta, they have at length practically given way altogether. This will be interpreted as a confession of error, misjudgment, and incapacity for statescraft.—Newcastle Daily Chronicle.

THE complete surrender which has been made by the Indian Government to the Anglo-Indian Defence Association is the last act of Lord Ripon's weak and regardless dealing with the Ilbert Bill. The surrender is not only complete, but bears all the appearance of a rout. The alteration of the Bill from the side of the native magistrates to that of the European subject is a more complete subversion of the original proposal than the most ardent upholder of European rights could have expected or claimed. Not merely does the surrender abolish the conception of diminishing the safeguards for the liberty of Europeans from native control, but increases the protections by restoring the right of trial by jury, of which they were partially deprived in 1872. The original purport of the Bill is so far maintained that the distinction between European and native district magistrates or session judges is abolished; but this concession is more than counterbalanced by the provision that the right is given to every European British subject, when brought for trial before a district magistrate or sessions judge, to claim trial by a jury, the majority of whose members shall be his own countrymen. This right may also be exercised even in districts to which the jury system has not yet been extended. The chief bone of contention has all along been the forfeiture of the privilege of being tried by members of one's own race. The point of extending power to native magistrates was a departmental affair to which no objection would be raised so long as it did not conflict with the principle of trial by peers. A further sop is thrown to Baboodom by the extension of the powers of the district magistrate to imposing a sentence of six months' imprisonment, instead of three as hitherto, and if it pleases them we have no objection. It was because the power of trial was open to abuse that we have persistently opposed the measure, and now there is the security that, no matter what the native judge's summing up may be, or what horde of native witnesses be brought, there is the security that a European will practically be tried by persons of his own race. The instincts which we have maintained prevented a native magistrate from appreciating the condition of a European prisoner are of little danger when the conviction must come from Europeans, and there is the fullest assurance that racial feeling will guarantee the sympathetic justice which is the only form of just treatment. It may be that the upholders of the Bill will claim that the "principle" of the measure is untouched. That may be admitted, for the winners can afford to be generous; but there has been grafted on the principle a concession which renders the original idea subordinate and helpless.

The surrender is completely marked in the closing sentence of the arrangement. It stipulates that the Anglo-Indian Defence Association is to treat those concessions as a settlement of the question. The association was ready enough to do so, but the condition bears the absurd form of restricting the concessions to only a portion of the claims. It is a petty and ungracious method of grudging to give more than what was asked which will please the advocates of the Ilbert Bill with the belief that the surrender is not altogether complete. To those who are cognisant of the under-currents which sent the compromise to the surface the matter has another interpretation. The bitter antagonism to the Ilbert Bill which has convulsed India for nearly a year, the race hostility stirred up by the different discussions, and the attitude of defence assumed by the Europeans, has scared the Indian Government more than it would like to confess. The duel was rapidly becoming a outrance, and the first indications of European active hostility were given in the studied insults to the Viceroy on his appearances in public. Lord Ripon's aim was to become the idol of the natives, but the Hindoo has a habit of beating his idol when it fails to provide daily bread. The depression in trade, which was the first result of the race agitation, affected the natives more than the Europeans, and it is the case in India, as much to-day as in the times of John Company, that the country is made prosperous by its merchants, be the Government disposed as it pleases. No amount of legislation will overcome mercantile disquietude, and the effects of the Ilbert Bill were displayed in every commercial house and on every plantation. The natives are astute enough to change their minds when it is a question of welfare, and the Government has not of late shone so brightly in their eyes. The Viceroy had never a right to seek fame from the natives at the expense of another section of the community, and his plans have been discomfited by the very means he trusted so much. Another, but in this case intentional, rapprochement which began to loom seriously before the Viceroy was a combination between the Europeans and the zemindars in Bengal. The latter have materially suffered by Lord Ripon's imposition upon them of the principles of land tenure which the Home Government have instituted in Ireland. The grievances of the Bent Bill and the Ilbert Bill affected a body of sufferers capable in alliance of exciting the gravest apprehensions of the Administration, especially when the Government could only rank against them the hypothetical benefits to the baboos and the ryots. The morale of such a combination may be open to question, but its practical results were too serious to be ignored. These are among the intimidations which have impelled the Government to complete surrender, and their propriety cannot be doubted by those who recognise the folly and danger of the step Lord Ripon proposed to take.

India is not a country which can be governed by sentimentalists, and Lord Ripon has found that out. The decay of race feeling gave rise to the Ilbert Bill. There never was a time in the history of India when racial hostility was so utterly absent from the intercourse of the various peoples as existed up to the end of last year. The natural antagonism of the European and the Hindoo seemed to have subsided into a respectful harmony which was every day advancing the prosperity of the country. The Anglo-Indian population was a mere handful in the midst of the natives, yet it commanded the respect it deserved. It had leavened the country with the elements of progressive industry, and every conception of intrusion was dying out. Lord Ripon's approval of the Ilbert Bill in January last was sprung upon the people without a word of warning, and both natives and Europeans instantly felt that their relative situations had undergone an instant transformation. The disunion which set in had a remarkable effect, and was even more detrimental to the natives than to the Europeans. It stirred up fancies which had no foundation in fact, and the natives began to prate of rights and equality for which not the slightest basis could be found. That, however, became a thing of the past recently when it was discovered that European domination was the sole guarantee of progress and prosperity. The surrender of the proposals of the Ilbert Bill is, therefore, the natural result of the European supremacy having asserted itself in the most practical way. A pro-native policy means nothing if it includes among its provisions embarrassments for the Europeans; and the only policy which can benefit India and the Empire, the natives and the Anglo-Indians, is one which gives facilities for the extension of European enterprise, and the opening up, by all the aids of civilisation of the districts in India still beyond the possibility of rapid intercourse.—Glasgow News.

a measure similar to this one in its main features, made no such assertion, but, on the contrary, seem from a passage in the report to have been unanimous in holding what is a nearly universal opinion, viz., that the ryots of Bengal Proper are stronger than the zemindars. This will scarcely be disputed by those who had opportunities of forming an opinion on the point, and it is pretty well known that in Eastern Bengal the ryots are very much the stronger, and that if protection or assistance is required there it is required by the zemindar. After all that has been said and written on the Bill, it seems unnecessary for me to discuss particulars, but I would say that it is a mistake to think that there is always a teeming population scrambling for land. In Nudiya and Murshidabad, for example, where the rents are notoriously low, thousands of bighas have become Istafa, and I know one proprietor, an indigo planter, who has got out a steam plough from home to cultivate the relinquished lands. The said proprietor has written to me that he cannot see wherein lies the fairness of calling all land ryoti until it can be proved to be khamar. There are thousands of bighas in this and other parts of the country—Neezabad—of indigo concerns which are alternately sown in indigo and paddy, and there are thousands of bighas lying fallow which have been relinquished by the ryots, and for which no rent is obtained, yet under this new law, although the proprietor cultivates them, they can be taken by the ryots without his consent. Again, there are thousands of bighas of grass jungle, which have never been cultivated at all, and which are in the hands of the landlord. The ryots will not bring them into cultivation, and yet, as soon as the landlord goes to the expense of doing so, the ryot has a right to step in. I say let us do the utmost we constitutionally can to prevent such a Bill as is proposed being passed. It will reduce your status and make zemindar almost an empty name. It will cause much litigation and much bad feeling between you and the ryots, and it will throw the latter into the hands of the mahajuns, an eventuality, which Mr. Ilbert admits is not unlikely, but one which, he says, the Government of the day will be able to deal with. So you see that if the Bill be passed there is to be no finality in it, but you and the ryots are likely to be experimented on again at an early date.

Maharajah NARENDRA KRISHNA BAHADOOR spoke as follows:—Gentlemen,—The Bengal Tenancy Bill now pending in the Legislative Council of his Excellency the Viceroy has been discussed threadbare. I would, however, make a few remarks on it. It proposes to devise measures for improving the status of the zemindars, and ameliorating the condition of the ryots, the laudable aim of Government being to place the landed interest in general on a satisfactory footing, and to benefit all classes therein concerned. "The statement of objects and reasons" mentions that, according to the provisions of the Permanent Settlement, the Government has the right to enact laws, from time to time, for the protection and welfare of persons whose interest in land is inferior to that of the zemindars. It also admits that Reg. 1 of 1793, and Act 10 of 1859 have laid down in letter and spirit that the fixity of revenue will never be interfered with, and that the zemindars will be at liberty to make their own arrangements with their ryots for the settlement of rents according to the well-understood rules of contract which may lead to the benefit of both. But the way in which the relation between the superior and subordinate landed classes is about to be disturbed, and the freedom of contract shackled at every step, by the various clauses of the Bill, would for all practical purposes, set the pledge of Government at naught. The progressive improvement of the classes intended to be benefited, under the operation of general education, and an intelligent understanding of mutual interest, does not render it necessary that such a law should be passed. Our Government, which has always the good of the country at heart, fears, perhaps from incorrect information, that as in Ireland, the rupture between landlords and tenants has resulted from a denial to the latter of the three gifts—a fixity of tenure, a fair rent, and a free sale of holdings—these gifts should be bestowed upon the Bengal ryot to prevent the like catastrophe in this country. But the facts, circumstances, and conditions here are so utterly different that they do not call for or justify Government interference in the shape of legislation to compel such concessions. The cultivating classes, according to the report of a distinguished Revenue Commissioner, are already more powerful than the landlords, who would now be made mere rent receivers or annuitants. The which practically one-sided character of the Bill, which curtails the rights of landlords, and confers additional privileges and rights on the ryots, will, it is feared, reverse the existing peaceful state of things, and determine the ryots to assume a hostile attitude to the zemindars. It is well-known to revenue officers that, with their absolute power, with the awe the name of Government inspires, and with very summary proceedings sanctioned by the law, they find great difficulty in realising rents from the khas mehal tenants. They can, therefore, well imagine what would be the fate of zemindars and other landowning classes, if the Bill be passed in its present form, hampering still more the already hampered proceedings for the realisation of rents. The landlords must give up all hopes of managing their zemindari affairs profitably to themselves, and of advancing the interest of the ryots. If once the latter class lose the respect due to the former, and see the means provided by law to put off payment, they would practically escape from it, and the result would be the sale of zemindaris and the expropriation of their owners. The Bill proposes to confer an occupancy-right on a ryot for all lands he may hold in a village for any short time, if he possesses a certain plot of land there for twelve years. This will prevent the landlords from entering into new settlements of rents on advantageous terms for such lands, not to mention the novelty and unjustness of such a provision. The proposed law, it is true, recognises enhancement of rent in respect of an occupancy tenure, but any person having a practical knowledge of the difficulties which beset enhancement suits, will at once see that this provision of the law sounds well, but practically would not answer its purpose. The provision which would not allow an ordinary ryot to be evicted from his holding, unless he gets compensation for any improvements made by him, is unjust, as it goes against the essence of an implied contract. When a ryot settles in a village, he does so of his own accord, and it should be his interest to come to an agreement with the landlord, compelling him to pay this compensation when he gives up the land against his will. The law ought not to award compensation for disturbance of possession. The Bill ought also to be provided for a monthly payment of rents to zemindars. Apart from the fact that the imposition of the Road Cess and the Public Works Cess is a direct infringement of the permanent settlement, and that they are practically additions after a century to the revenue, pledged to be kept intact, it is well known that zemindars make payment of these items in advance, and partially recoup themselves from their tenants. A summary proceeding for the realisation of these cesses and of undisputed rents, for which, in fact, the present legislative measure was initiated, should have been inserted in the Bill. I would conclude with the observation that the Bill, as it now stands, would defeat the object it has in view, and would benefit no party. Its tendency is to ruin the landlords, to sow the seeds of dissension and litigation between them and their ryots, to create distrust in the minds of the people, and make the Government break its oft-repeated pledges. Though it starts with the aim of benefiting zemindars and tenants, it unduly lends its weight on the side of the latter, which proves injurious to the interest of landlords.

Baboo JOYKISSEN MOOKERJEE said:—The landholders of Bengal and Behar are beholden to the Government of India for having published the opinions of public officers on the Bengal Tenancy Bill; for if anything was wanting to show that it materially trenches upon the vested rights of landholders, that the changes it proposes in the existing law are neither called for by the circumstances of the country nor demanded by the ryots themselves, that there are, in short, no necessity and justification whatever for such a revolutionary measure, the published opinions of divisional commissioners and experienced district and judicial officers have conclusively shown it. Eminent officers of State, like Lord Ulrick Browne, Mr. Munro, Mr. Beames, and Mr. Westmacott, who have an intimate knowledge of the condition of the people, and a lifelong experience of the working of the fiscal and land laws of the country, have condemned the Bill in no measured terms; while in the thin ranks of those who have given their complete adherence to the Bill, there are hardly half-a-dozen officers of any standing, and not one of any distinction in the service

An attempt to traverse the facts and arguments by which they have sought to support the principles of the Bill would tire the patience of any audience. I shall, therefore, content myself with combatting the views and arguments of one who has evidently taken very great pains in inditing his minute, in arraying his facts and figures in support of the Bill, and in bringing to a focus all that could be said in its favour, I mean His Honour the Lieutenant Governor of these provinces. His Honour has, however, given only a qualified assent to the Bill. Who will deny the crude nature of the Bill, and the necessity of further and maturer deliberation on the subject, when extensive modifications are suggested in it by one of its warmest advocates? These suggestions relate to the most salient points of the Bill, and they would, if given effect to, change its whole aspect. His Honour, for instance, condemns the proposal to reckon all occupancy ryots with fixed rents as tenure-holders, and would convert all ryots who have sublet their lands and all purchasers of occupancy holdings, unless cultivators, into tenure-holders; he would have one procedure for the recovery of rents from ryots who have sublet their lands, and a different one in respect of those who cultivate them themselves; he would create a rebuttable presumption of occupancy rights in favour of all ryots, settled or unsettled; he condemns the proposals respecting tables of rates as impracticable, and would make them applicable only in special cases; he rejects the principle that occupancy ryots are entitled to hold at privilege rates of rent, and would fix one and the same maximum limit to rent in the cases both of occupancy and non-occupancy ryots; he condemns the chapter relating to distraints, suggests material modifications of the provisions respecting compensation for disturbance, and concludes by saying that the Bill "if modified on these points" would be a successful piece of legislation. But His Honour the Lieutenant Governor is not singular in his opinion that the Bill requires material modifications. There is not one of the officers who have expressed their approval of the main principles of the Bill, who does not find fault with a number of its provisions. In fact, there are few sections in the Bill which have not been found fault with by some one or other of its supporters. But what are the arguments by which the necessity of the measure has been made out and the provisions of the Bill defended? Mr. Rivers Thompson says that agriculture in these provinces has degenerated to a mere spoliation of the soil, and that the struggle for life among the ryots is daily becoming more severe, but the unanimous testimony of the district officers contradicts the statement, and confirms, on the contrary, the statement made by the Hon. Mr. Gibbon, that "the province has made extraordinary strides in prosperity of late years." Again, His Honour justifies the necessity of the Bill on the ground that the landlords themselves first raised the cry for an amendment of the Rent Law, but, knowing what everybody knows, the nature of the amendment that the landlords wanted, His Honour should have seen that no amount of sophistry could justify such a conclusion. There are other errors pervading the minute which show how truly weak is the case for the defenders of the Bill. When His Honour reads Sections 37-39 of the Reg. viii. of 1793, to mean that no land was recognised as khamar unless it existed as such in 1765, when he gives to a judgment of Mr. Justice Field an interpretation quite the reverse of its true interpretation, when he states, in spite of eminent judicial authority to the contrary, that Act 10 of 1859 simply restored to the ryots the right of occupancy which they before enjoyed, when he concludes from a reading of the regulation that every agreement between zemindar and ryot was formerly subjected to official control, when he impresses a passage from a despatch of the Court of Directors relating to illegal cesses to do duty as proof of the powers of the State to determine rates of rent, when he assumes the existence of a custom for the sale of occupancy holdings from registration returns, without bearing in mind that most of those sales were not recognized until after the payment of salaries, when he confesses to a want of knowledge of the actual share of the produce which before and at the time of the Permanent Settlement formed the basis of rent, when he speaks of deposits of rent by ryots before Act 10 of 1859 became law, when he uses the term dearah to signify alluvial lands in the plains, and when he regards the limit of appeal in suits of less value than Rs. 50 as a "very great concession to zemindars," His Honour exposes the true nature of the foundation on which the superstructure has to be raised, and of the materials with which it has to be constructed. I do not grudge His Honour the pleasure of speaking complacently of the moderation of Government in having increased the rental of the Khoorda estate from Rs. 1,52,000 to Rs. 2,42,000 only; but I humbly submit that, if facts and figures relating to khas mehals and private estates were carefully arranged side by side, and compared with one another, the necessity for legislation "for good administration, peace, and prosperity," as His Honour puts it, would be found nearer home. The published opinions demonstrate most clearly the want of any necessity whatever for a land law for Bengal, such as has been proposed, and I think that, fortified with these opinions, we should submit a fresh memorial to Government praying for a reconsideration of this important measure; and I hope that, in view of the impending famine with which these provinces are threatened, Government will at least postpone the discussion of the measure to a more fitting time. I would, in conclusion, venture to state that His Honour and other advocates of the Bill entirely overlook the fact that, by making every transaction between zemindar and ryot subject to official control, the Bill virtually transfers the management of landed property from the zemindar to inexperienced and young revenue officers, and that nothing but serious mischief and loss will be the result. The money hitherto expended in cultivating the lands, and the maintenance of families, will be devoured by unprincipled village Mooktears and Mahajuns, and the stamp fees. Almost every transaction hitherto amicably settled will be taken into Court, and the ryots will become a prey to Court underlings. These matters should be thoroughly discussed before strange and untried theories are allowed to prevail. The resolution was then put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

Baboo PEARY MOHUN MOOKERJEE said:—Immediately after the Bengal Tenancy Bill was first read in Council, and the despatches of the Government of India and of the Secretary of State regarding it were made public, I suggested the advisability of submitting a memorial to the Secretary of State on the subject. The proposal was at the time deemed premature. I think, however, that we have lost much valuable time, but, although late, it is not yet too late to memorialise His Excellency and pray for a reconsideration of the subject. The despatch of the Government of India is a unique document. While professing to give an impartial history of the measure, it is thoroughly onesided, and the statement of facts which it contains is very far from being fair to the landholders. In spite of indubitable evidence to the contrary, it describes the zemindars prior to the Permanent Settlement as mere rent collectors; it assumes a power in the Government of the country to determine the rates of rent payable by ryots, although the result of the elaborate inquiry on the point conducted by Sir John Shore led quite to the very opposite conclusion; it represents the Government as having unqualified power under the reservation clause in Regulation I of 1793 to legislate in the matter, without indicating in the faintest manner that that power is strenuously questioned by landholders, it ignores Regulation viii. and other regulations of 1793, and broadly states that the Permanent Settlement left the rights of ryots unascertained and undefined; it gives in support of unfounded assertions isolated passages from State papers which were either discarded, or which read in a proper light, bear quite a contrary meaning; it indulges in vague reflections on the oppressive conduct of landholders, and describes the ryots as a down-trodden class of men, and it sets forth the case of the Pubna ryots, and the present relations of landlord and tenant in a way so as to lead anyone outside the country to think that Bengal is on the verge of a widespread agrarian disturbance. It is on the strength of representations like these that the sanction of the Secretary of State to the principles of this iniquitous Bill was obtained. For the purpose of supporting the principles of the Bill, it was not enough that the opinions of commissioners of divisions and experienced districts officers were withheld, and a garbled statement of facts laid before the Secretary of State. The very laws of the country were misconstrued, the condition of the people was misrepresented, and the suggestions of Sir Barnes Peacock, and the demand of the landholders for an amendment of the Rent Law, were perverted to make out a case of necessity for the Bill, in a way the ethical propriety of which is at least doubtful. I think it, therefore, essential that a statement of the case from the landlords' point of view should be submitted to the Secretary of State for India, and His Excellency be prayed to reconsider the question as to whether legislation shall proceed in the form suggested by the Government of India. The anxiety which he has expressed in his despatch that there should be no "great and novel departure from the ancient custom and existing law of Bengal" makes me hope that we shall not appeal to His Excellency in vain. He then moved the second resolution, which was as follows:—"That a memorial be submitted to the Secretary of State with reference to the despatch of the Government of India, upon which his sanction to the Bill was accorded, praying that he will direct that no further proceedings in the matter of the Bill shall be taken, until he has had an opportunity of reconsidering his decision with reference to the facts stated in the memorial; and further, that a memorial be addressed to His Excellency the Viceroy in Council, praying that the Bill be postponed till the orders of the Secretary of State on the above representation be received."

Mr. H. BELL then said:—Mr. Chairman and Gentlemen, —At this late hour it is quite impossible for me to say more than a few words. We certainly made a mistake in not having our meeting at 2 o'clock instead of at 3.30, as so many gentlemen have been anxious to take part in this discussion, and at the present time, I believe, there are several others who are still desirous of addressing you. All these gentlemen are deeply interested in the question before us, and some of them have come from long distances to give by their presence strength to our deliberations. But, gentlemen, you cannot make more than sixty minutes out of an hour, and the gentlemen who have preceded me, and who have expressed their views so ably, have somewhat slipped into the few minutes I should otherwise have had. However, I don't think you will lose much by missing the speech I should, under other circumstances have delivered. The resolution which my friend, Baboo Peary Mohun Mookerji, has moved, speaks for itself. The memorial to the Secretary of State is before you, and it asks the Secretary of State, before he condemns the zemindars, to hear what they have to say in their defence. The zemindars complain that the case has not been fairly stated by the Government of India, and they ask him to reconsider his decision in the light of the facts their memorial discloses. The views advocated in the Government of India's despatch were admittedly the views of the peasant proprietary school, and we ask the Secretary of State not to base his decision upon the views of any particular school, but upon the law of the land and principles of fairness to any class and interest in the country. If we are able to show that the despatch of the Government of India was misleading, we have a right to expect that the Secretary of State will reconsider his decision. This is, it seems to me, a question of justice and nothing more. There were other questions I had intended to touch upon, but it would be an infliction upon you if I did so at this late hour. (Cries of "we would be glad to hear them.") One of the speakers who have preceded me has told you that the Secretary of State's sanction had been obtained on the plea that the Bill was restoring the ancient land law of the country, and he further pointed out how often property had changed hands since the Permanent Settlement. He might also have added that in a vast number of cases the vendors of this property were the Government themselves. They sold the property under the sale laws free from all encumbrances. The Government now say that they discovered an old land law, and they made a mistake in selling the property free from all encumbrance. If that is so, it seems to me to follow, as matter of course, that the Government, as the vendors of this property, are bound to make compensation. (Applause.) That seems to me a very important element in this discussion. My friend, the Chairman, spoke of occupancy rights, and I was much struck with the remark he made. He referred to certain figures which had been published in the Calcutta Gazette, and which showed that, during the past year, there had been 32,000 instances in which occupancy rights have been sold, and in 16,000 cases these rights have passed out of the hands of the ryots. This seems to me a strong argument to prohibit the sale of these occupancy rights. The figures certainly do not prove what Mr. Thompson intends them to prove, that occupancy rights are sold without the landlord's consent. Many leases confer upon the tenant the right to transfer the land. The figures relied upon neither tell us whether the sales took place under the terms of the lease, or with the landlord's express consent. There is absolutely nothing to show that a single sale took place without the consent of the landlord. Without this information these figures are utterly worthless. As far as my experience goes, occupancy rights, pure and simple, if not supported by a lease allowing the land to be transferred, are not transferable, and this is the established law of the land. There is one feature in the Bill to which I think I ought to call your attention before I sit down. It will subvert all the existing relations between landlords and tenants. Imagine the dissensions it will create, the delusions it will raise in the breast of the ryot. Only the other day I came across a proclamation, issued, I believe, by a person in Calcutta, to the ryots of a village not fifty miles from this place. It was addressed to Sreejute Brigo Hurry Mundle, and it is stated that the beneficent and great Lord Ripon has taken into consideration the miserable condition of the ryots, and the oppression of the zemindars, and that he has determined to fix their rent in order that they might, from generation to generation, enjoy their lands in peace and contentment. Now, it is a very serious matter, when agitators go about the country, and sow dissension between the zemindars and their ryots. I do not know how it is, but we seem to live in times of dissension. There seems to be a fatality about all Lord Ripon's measures. How comes it to pass that not a single measure is proposed without creating dissension and discord? Last year we were a happy contented and united community; we are now agitated by political rancour and class animosities. I am sure you must all deplore this as much as I do. (Applause.) My friend, the chairman, expressed his pleasure at seeing so many English gentlemen here to-day. It is with great pleasure I have attended, because by doing so, I feel I am protesting against the mischievous suicidal policy on which the present Government is bent. (Hear, hear, and applause.) Wherever we look we see signs of reckless legislation, the outcome of speculative theories and misguided sentiment. Your rights are now being invaded; and when you see other sections of the community assailed, will you turn your back upon them in the struggle or give them your sympathy and support. (Applause.) The time has come when every man who has a privilege to lose or property to defend, should unite for their mutual defence. If we unite, neither this measure nor any other objectionable measure can pass through the Council. (Applause.) Union is our strength, and by union alone can we obtain constitutional government. I, for one, should be glad to see a little more of constitutional government in this country, and I should like to see the Legislative Council with a larger share of non-official representation than it has at present. (Great applause.) The only way, if we wish this Bill not to pass through the Council, is to unite together against what the Maharajah has very correctly termed these Radical measures. If we do this, neither this nor any other iniquitous Bill will have a chance of passing. If we do not do this, then each of us will be separately sacrificed; but if we unite, then this Bill will not be passed, for union is our strength. (Loud applause.) The resolution was then put to the meeting and carried unanimously.

Mr. HILL said:—I would ask you to consider this Bill in another aspect than that of its effect on your own fortunes, and that is, that in sacrificing your fortunes, the institutions of public utility which are supported so liberally by the landlords of this large province will in their turn be sacrificed also. Those who framed these resolutions framed them with great policy. The resolution I have to ask you to support does not stop at a consideration of this measure merely having regard to its effect on yourselves, because we know that, if it stopped there, the argument of the deterioration of your estates would have no effect on the framers of this Bill. It has been framed by those who call themselves Reformers; but who are really Revolutionists. Men may differ in the means they use to attain that goal of perfection which all desire to reach; but they are all in their own way reformers at heart. (Hear, hear.) But different schools of reformers do differ in this. All instinct is blind, and there are certain reformers who give full, free, unfettered play to the blind impulses of their reforming instinct, others control these impulses by reason based upon experience. Time brings one school after another to the surface, and at present one of these schools is at the surface which revels in a debauch of revolutionary legislation. (Applause.) That type won't last for ever, fortunately for mankind; but while it does last, it is for all men who have the interests of this country at heart to withstand this tide of revolution, or at all events to bring to bear upon these measures the light of practical experience and the light of past history. I have heard it asked to-day on what ground is this measure proposed. The school of reformers which is now to the fore has this for its guiding maxim—the thing exists, and, therefore, it cannot be right. They see all human institutions in a perverted light. They have drawn from sentiment, and sentiment differs from all experience; thus all that they know of reform is the destruction of the institutions which exist, and the reconstruction of them according to their own views. Every institution that exists must be reconstructed in some way, and, therefore, in the case of this measure what do we find? They have gone back through the mist of ages, and they find in the past a long forgotten right which they drag from the limbo of decayed and effete institutions, and they want to substitute that for what has been the living growth of centuries, and which has moulded the people of this presidency as they now are. And in substituting these rights, they entirely forget and pass over the evils which may have co-existed with these past institutions, and they say, "In these days the cultivator was the owner of the soil, you are usurpers, and we shall restore to the rightful owners what to them belongs." But, in all these past centuries, long before the Permanent Settlement, who have had these existing rights? The facts stated in this memorial they cannot deny, or if they deny them, they cannot prove their denial, but, even assuming that, up to the Permanent Settlement, the zemindars had no rights, since then the right in the land has been vested in the zemindars, and the subordinate rights given to the cultivator were rights personal to himself, and which he could not pass on to another. Are all these rights which have existed during these hundred years to be swept away because, centuries ago, or even a hundred years ago, not the present ryots but others who may have died, and of whom the present ryots are not necessarily the descendants,—are the rights of all these persons, the zemindars, and their transferees to be sacrificed? There was a policy in the Permanent Settlement, and that policy was to recognise the settlement because it was felt, as Mr. Keswick has pointed out, that this is one of the incentives to agricultural industry, namely, some kind of lasting interest in the soil. That was the policy of the regulations of the Permanent Settlement. Up to that time the zemindars had been subject to ejections which knew no end, and which were not fixed, and it was a policy of that settlement, in fixing the demand on the zemindar, to say "We have so far not only fixed the rights which we found existing, because these rights were insecure; but we restore to you the security which was yours before that period; you, the zemindars, seeing this, will be encouraged to induce the cultivation of that land which is now your own by tenants who will cultivate it to the greatest advantage, and in so doing you will benefit not only yourselves, but you will benefit the Government of this country." That was their policy then; what is it now? Confiscation is an ugly word, but what is it but confiscation? And that same school which is now so ready to confis-cate the rights of the zemindar will be equally ready to subject the ryot to similar confiscation if he should ever reap the benefits from this measure which it is hoped he will reap. (Hear, hear, and applause.) But is there anything to lead us to believe that the ryots will reap any advantage? If not, the officials and the manner of the Bill point to this, that the effect of giving the ryot a transferable right will be that he will gravitate where he has so long been gravitating—to the money-lender. This will be the result of the Bill to substitute for the hereditary landowners of this province, men who have ousted these landowners by extorting money from the ryots. It is a measure, not to benefit these ryots, but to benefit these extortioners, these money-lenders. You have hitherto had the right of freely contracting with your ryots. You have enjoyed with your ryots any improvement that might take place in the natural production of the soil; you have benefited equally with them, and it has been to your interest to induce the ryots to remain. Mr. Rivers Thompson relies on what he calls a "customary right" which now exists in the ryot, but if that right exists, it is the strongest possible argument in favour of the past action of the zemindars in this country. That custom could not have grown up without their assent. That they have assented is proof that they have worked for the interests of the community at large, and for the interests of these ryots, and that is the testimony of all the officials whom the Government have been compelled to consult. During these many years the ryots have grown in strength and in wealth, and that has been due to the liberality and justice and fair dealing of the zemindars. (Applause.) Gentlemen, I could have wished this resolution had fallen to abler hands than mine, and to one who was more intimately acquainted with zemindary interests; but I regret it the less, because the liberality of the zemindars is not a thing that can be hidden under a bushel; it has been acknowledged over and over again in public. That being so, you are asked to consider this matter from that point which will most affect the Government namely, what will be the effect on your purses to prevent your supporting works of public utility. Has the Government ever been chary in appealing to you for works of public utility through its officers? Or have you ever been backward, when such appeals were made? You have felt that in supporting these institutions, and in protecting the lives of the ryots you were protecting your own interests, although it was not from that motive but from higher motives, that you have acted. Does the Government think the class they intend to substitute for you, a class trained as usurers, is more likely to be liberal than the hereditary aristocracy of this country? Yet remember that this Government has wooed your votes from time to time with various measures of reform. You will not possibly find, if you will permit me to say so, that all the advantages which the Government have shown forth will ensue. Lately you have been endowed with Local Self-Government; but with that Local Self-Government a greater and greater burden will be thrown upon you; and the aid which the Government has been giving will be withdrawn from you. These institutions, without which the country will never attain that prosperity which we hope for, will be thrown more and more upon you for support, and, at the same time, the means you have to support them will be taken from you. Gentlemen, I need not detain you longer. The arguments in favour of the resolution force themselves upon you without its being necessary to state them. The fact cannot be denied that these institutions will suffer, unless the class substituted for you will support them better than you have done, and that would be impossible. (Hear, hear.) Reference has been made to political economy, to which these reformers are apt to appeal; and it is that very school who are so anxious to uphold political economy who now bring forward a measure which is opposed to every principle which lies at the foundation of political economy. Some persons may think that the moving principle of humanity is that of gaining the utmost pecuniary advantage to themselves. They forget that there are other motives by which humanity is swayed, some of which are bad and some good. However, appealing to this one motive, the present legislators say, "We will give the ryot an interest in the land which he does not possess, because that will raise him to a state of prosperity he does not at present enjoy." To that the remarks of Mr. Beames afford a complete answer. The ryots of this country have through long ages been content to live a hand-to-mouth existence. They have been accustomed to spend on certain ceremonies large sums of money in comparison with their means, and this has thrown them into the hands of the money-lender. Now, the incentive to industry is, not only a desire for gain; but if a man knows he has to pay a certain sum, the feeling that he has to pay will make him work that he may be able to pay. The rent to be fixed by this measure has been calculated upon a very small proportion of the products of the land. What, then, will be the effect of introducing a measure which fixes rents upon that basis, which is not a fair rent, as it does not take into calculation all these more valuable products? If the ryot has not to pay a fair rent, the only incentive to him will be to grow the less valuable products, and the more valuable ones will be thrown aside. The result will be that the ryot will be more and more thrown into the hands of the money-lender, and more and more disabled from paying the rents which even under this Act will be your just due. It is for such a right as this that your interests are sacrificed, and those institutions which you have supported will perish with them. On these grounds I have to move the following resolution:—"That it be respectfully brought to the notice of Government that the present Bill will seriously depreciate the value of property held by the zemindars and other landowners of Bengal, and will consequently reduce and cripple their means of maintaining or contributing to the support of institutions and objects of public utility."

Babu KESHUB CHUNDER ACHARJIA, of Mymensingh, said:—Gentlemen, our learned president has called on me to second the third resolution. I wish this duty had been left to some other gentleman possessing proper experience and eloquence to do full justice to the subject; but, gentlemen, you must bear in mind that in denying to myself the amount of eloquence necessary for the purpose, I virtually deny to use the power of uttering articulate language; for, if I can complain to the nearest magistrate when I am robbed of my watch and chain, I do not know why I should not be able to complain when I am robbed of my immovables. Gentlemen, I need scarcely mention here that by all classes of men of temperate opinions the Tenancy Bill is looked upon as an attempt to commit dacoity in excelsis. (Laughter.) The intelligent portion of the ryots also entertain a very great misgiving about this Bill. They are afraid that the Government, by giving so many new rights and privileges, will impose a new tax upon them as a consideration for the favours bestowed upon them. Gentlemen, I am glad to inform you that this precious Bill is not condemned only in India. During this last Puja vacation, I visited Ceylon, and there I had the pleasure of being introduced to Mr. Cupper, Editor of the Ceylon Times, and several other leading gentlemen, both native and European, in Colombo, Candy, and Nuera Elyia. Every one of these gentlemen condemned the Tenancy Bill as a measure calculated to take away the vested rights of the Bengal Zemindars. One of these gentlemen observed that "if the Indian Government can justify itself to pass this Bill into law, then the Ceylonese may as well give our plantations to the coolies who worked hard to prepare these gardens." Gentlemen, at this late hour I shall not detain you by entering into a minute discussion of the Bill. You seem to have become impatient. No duty is more unpleasant than to address an impatient audience. I shall, therefore, content myself by simply stating here some of the new principles enunciated in the Legislative Council of India, as the basis upon which the Bill is founded.

1.—It is urged that by clause 1, section 8, Regulation 1 of 1793, the Government reserved to itself the power of enacting such laws and regulations for the protection of the ryots as it may deem proper, however inconsistent these laws may be to the general provisions of the code creating the Permanent Settlement. Gentlemen, I need scarcely tell you for your information that, according to our interpretation of the said reservation clause, Government cannot enact any law which will be inconsistent with the whole code creating the Permanent Settlement. We contend that the regulation creating the Permanent Settlement should be so construed that one part of it may not be neutralised by the other.

2.—We are told that the main object of the Tenancy Bill is to restore the ryots of Bengal to their former status and privileges, which they enjoyed before the Permanent Settlement, and which have been encroached upon by the zemindars, on account of the supine negligence and ignorance of the past generation of Government officials. Gentlemen, we are asked to believe that when the Mogul Government had lost all its power and prestige, when it only existed in name, to be used by adventurers as it best suited them, when the Rajas of Nattore, Burdwan, and Dinagepur openly opposed and defied the puppet Nizam of Murshadabad, when the pettiest landholder enjoyed and exercised nearly all the powers of an independent Raja, the ryots of Bengal possessed greater rights and privileges than they do now under the all-powerful and Radical Government of British India. But, gentlemen, unless the present Government means to give to the ryots of Bengal some imaginary and theoretical rights and privileges which they may have enjoyed, or claimed by some member of the Radical school to have been enjoyed by them some thousands of years ago, and which were not known at the time of the Permanent Settlement, and are still unknown to us, I do not think the ryots of Bengal will be much benefited if they are restored to what was their actual effective and recognised rights in 1793, or during 700 or 800 years before that. You know, gentlemen, the Permanent Settlement was not concluded in hot haste, as the Tenancy Bill is sought to be passed now. In spite of the pressing necessity of the Government for the said settlement in order to ensure the punctual payment of the Government revenue, the said settlement was concluded after a careful deliberation of nearly ten years. Gentlemen, as we have now, so we had at the time of the Permanent Settlement, plenty of officers entertaining extreme opinions in favour of the ryots. Mr.

Grant and the other supporters of peasants' right urged the East India Company to act on claims of right, instead of on existing facts, and to declare the ryots of Bengal the land-owners, dismissing the zemindars, whom they called tax collectors, with some pecuniary compensation. Mr. Grant and his supporters were, however, obliged to admit that in the actual state of things, as found out by inquiry, such rights were at least dormant, if not obsolete; but this was, of course, attributed to the usurpation of the suberdust zemindars. A policy of this nature was initiated in Oudh by Lord Dalhousie on the annexation of that country, when his officials began ripping up titles and taking the land from its actual possessors to restore it to claimants alleging that they or their ancestors had been wrongfully dispossessed. You know, gentlemen, how Lord Canning had to set aside that arbitrary settlement by issuing a proclamation confiscating all landed property and making a new settlement with the former owners, on the ground of their approved loyalty and good services during the Mutiny. But Lord Cornwallis, backed by Lord Teignmouth, then Mr. Shore, and by his other eminent advisers, was too wise to act on antiquated claims instead of on existing facts, and, therefore he made the Permanent Settlement with the zemindars, chowdhrys, and "other actual proprietors of the soil;" but at the same time he recognised such rights in the peasantry as had an actual existence and name. We contend that, although the Code of 1793 is wisely silent as to any theoretical and absolute rights in the peasantry of Bengal, as then set up for them by Mr. Grant and his supporters, it deals with the actually known rights then practically owned by them. These were known by the framers of the Code of 1793 as well as by the whole population of Bengal only as some form of either khudkast or pykast ryot tenure. The distinction between these two tenures depended on whether the ryot resided on his holding or not. The first point that naturally excites wonder is that, if the ryots of Bengal possessed greater rights and privileges previous to the Code of 1793 than they possess now, the nature and extent of those rights were at that time unknown to the authors of the code.

3.—After more than a century of British rule in Bengal, we are seriously told that the expression, "actual proprietors of the soil," as used in the regulations creating the Permanent Settlement, does not convey the idea of malik as understood in India. If this was the meaning of the code, Government should have explained it to the natives of India before or within thirty or forty years after the Permanent Settlement, when the zemindars had to pledge the ornaments belonging to their wives and children in order to raise money to pay the Government revenue.

Gentlemen, when, or at any rate before the passing of the sale law which invited and misled so many of our countrymen to invest their hard-earned money in land, our rulers have set up these new interpretations upon the code of 1793, it is no wonder that the Bill should contain provisions so shocking and revolting to all ideas of right and property. At this late hour I would not tire your patience, gentlemen, by entering into the provisions of the Bill, but suffice it to say that the whole of the Bill displays one primary motive, viz., the destruction of the zemindary rights. If I had time, gentlemen, I could point out that the authors of the Bill, in their anxiety to carry out their principal object, lost sight of the injuries they entailed by some of the provisions of the Bill upon the very class of men for whose benefit the Bill is intended. Gentlemen, when doctrines of so alarming a nature are openly avowed in the Legislative Council, it is no wonder that they should have been amplified and exaggerated till they led to the theory adopted by the ryots of Mymensingh, that the zemindars are not entitled to get more than 13 annas as rent for the best lands in their occupation. I wish I could give you, gentlemen, some detailed history of the combination of the Mymensingh ryots, but for want of time and patience on your part, I speak this much only, that the combination is getting stronger every day; the entire land in these two purgannahs have nearly become rent-free tenures. Some of the zemindars have been compelled to receive a nominal rent from the ryots more in the shape of alms given to beggars than as rents. The contagion is spreading in all directions; but who cares for this state of things so long as the cess and the revenue are punctually realised? Now, you know a little what amount of mischief the name of this precious Bill has committed, and if this state of things continues for two or three years more, the most valuable zemindaries will be sold for arrears of revenue, and in the absence of purchasers (for who is now to invest his money in zemindaries?) Government will have to buy them up for a rupee a lot. I think, till things come down to such a crisis, Government does not mean to adopt any measure for the protection of the Mymensingh zemindars. They have lost (the zemindars of Mymensingh) more than four lakhs of rupees last year and to what worldly use this large sum of money has come? Squandered away in marriages, poojahs, and litigations. Under all the circumstances, as I have stated above, gentlemen, I have every reason to hope that in seconding the third resolution, so ably moved by Mr. Hill, I shall receive your unanimous support. For want of time, gentlemen, I sit down, leaving many important facts untouched. (Applause.)

The resolution was then put and carried.

Mr. Nawab MEER MAHOMED ALI moved the next resolution, which was as follows:—"That arrangements be made for a general meeting in Calcutta of the zemindars of Bengal and Behar during the month of December, for the further discussion of the steps to be taken in the matter of the Bill." He said:—"Mr. President and Gentlemen,—It is not without some diffidence that I rise to move the resolution which I hold in my hand. But, gentlemen, I have this assurance, that, seeing the intelligent audience around me, it would require very little on my part to commend the resolution to your approbation. The Rent Bill, as has been very appropriately said, is a "life problem," and its importance is well-known. It is, therefore, essentially necessary that all the zemindars of Bengal and Behar should unite together on the same platform to discuss the provisions of the Bill, which is calculated seriously to affect their vital interests. I am afraid that at this late hour, I am trespassing too much upon your patience. But I cannot conclude without referring to an important provision in the Bill namely, Clause D of Section 75, which provides as follows:—"The enhanced rent shall not in any case exceed one-fifth of the estimated average annual value of the gross produce of the land in staple crops, calculated at the price at which ryots sell at harvest time." It would not be consistent with justice and equity to curtail the power of enhancement of the zemindars, and restrict them to one-fifth of the gross staple crops only. The zemindars are entitled to have a share in the enhancement of all sorts of crops.

The resolution was seconded by Raja POORNOO CHUNDER SINGH, and carried unanimously.

A vote of thanks was then proposed to the Chairman, after which the meeting dispersed.

MAIL NEWS.

The Municipal Corporation of the city presented an address of welcome, in replying to which his Royal Highness said that, although he had only been ten days in the country, he had seen sufficient to show him how full of interest it is and how vast are its resources.

The illuminations and the display of fireworks which were to have been held at Calcutta yesterday in honour of the Duke and Duchess of Connaught had to be postponed until Monday, Dec. 10, in consequence of the bad state of the weather.

The most important political event of the week has been the return of the Viceroy to Calcutta, and the exhibition of a hostile feeling towards him on the part of the European population.

This feeling was first demonstrated publicly on Friday, Nov. 30, at the annual St. Andrew's Dinner, where, in the presence of about 250 guests, including the Bishop of Calcutta and the most important members of the non-official European community, the toast of the Viceroy was proposed by the chairman (Mr. J. J. J. Keswick) without comment, and was unhonoured by the guests. There was some hissing, which was only suppressed by the playing of the band.

The Viceregal party left Allahabad by special train on Friday morning, Nov. 30, and on arrival at Howrah on Saturday morning, Dec. 1, were received by a large body of officials.

The natives assembled in large numbers in the streets through which the Viceroy passed on his way to Government House, and accorded his Excellency a warm reception. The European population also gathered at various points along the line of route, but their attitude showed that their feeling of antagonism to the Viceroy was very strong. At one or two points hisses and hootings were heard.

The Volunteer guard of honour at Government House was a very weak one. The number of members present was only 141, and many of these were Government clerks and schoolboys belonging to the cadet companies.

The Viceroy was received at Government House by a brilliant gathering of officials and native gentlemen, including the Lieutenant-Governor of Bengal and the High Court Judges. Only two members of the non-official community were present.

The Anglo-Indian newspapers unite in deploring the demonstrations which marked the Viceroy's arrival, and a hope is expressed that there will be no further ebullition of feeling.

The Bishop of Calcutta in his sermon on Sunday, Dec. 21, referred to the prevailing political dissension, exhorting the community to a more Christian feeling.

The Viceregal levée was very poorly attended, the non-official community being scarcely represented.

Considerable damage has been done to the exhibits in some departments, owing to the rain penetrating the roofs of temporary structures which constitute the annexes.

The Lieutenant Governor of Bengal was prevented by indisposition from attending the opening of the Exhibition.

It was expected the Viceroy would make a statement with reference to the Ilbert Bill at the meeting of the Viceregal Legislative Council on Dec. 7.

Meetings against the Ilbert Bill compromise sketched by Lord Northbrook have been held at Maldah, Jubbulpore, Gowhaty, and North Lakhimpore.

THE SETTLEMENT OF THE ILBERT BILL CONTROVERSY.

OUR warm desire to see a return of the old friendly relations between Englishmen and Indians in India, as those relations subsisted before the arrival of a Radical strife-making Viceroy, makes us hail with the greatest pleasure the settlement that has been effected of the Ilbert Bill controversy, merely on its merits as a stable solution of the difficulties raised by Lord Ripon's incredible foolishness. The settlement that has been offered by the Viceroy, and has been accepted by the Defence Association, undeniably confers on the Anglo-Indian community—by a stress of despotic power that is amusingly characteristic of Radicalism in excelsis—all, and more than all, the privileges and safeguards for which they have been contending during the past ten months. On the other hand, it has the merit of retaining, for native district magistrates and native sessions judges, a semblance of those powers for which (if we believe Mr. Ilbert rather than Mr. Badshah) their souls yearn; so that Lord Ripon may still console himself that he has conquered the Slur, the Anomaly, and all the other windmills against which he set himself to tilt. So far, so good. It is quite clear, at any rate, —whatever may be thought of the political morality of Lord Ripon's arrangement—that neither Mr. B. L. Gupta and his friends on the one side, nor the Anglo-Indian community on the other, can say one word against it, for it satisfies every possible claim on the part of either. Hence, the question is not unnaturally being asked by some of the more artless supporters of Lord Ripon's policy in the English Radical Press, how is it that such a very simple solution—since it is so satisfactory to all parties—has not been adopted, or, at least, suggested, at some earlier period of this disastrous controversy? This question is susceptible of a very plain and direct answer. We consider that it is of great importance, in the interests of the general public and of the Empire at large, that the answer should be put on record. And, therefore, whilst we wish, for the reason already stated, to say nothing that may be taken as indicating any dissent from the arrangement on the part of the Anglo-Indian community, we are glad to observe that Mr. F. S. Chapman, who was the Bombay civilian member of Council in 1872, has come forward in the Times to put the answer on record. It is briefly this—that the arrangement, whilst it certainly satisfies the interests which have been so wantonly attacked by Lord Ripon, is in itself, when considered from the administrative point of view, a blunder of the first magnitude, and a retrograde step which must, in the long run, produce endless trouble for the Government of India. It sacrifices, for a mere punctilio—i.e., for the sake of Lord Ripon's perverse determination not to return to the status quo disturbed by his folly—all that administrative convenience which was obtained by the wise compromise of 1872, and which has worked so well for the administration of criminal justice in the Mofussil during the last eleven years. Such a tremendous concession as this was never suggested by the Anglo-Indian non-official community, simply because it never occurred to any one of them that the Government would be likely to yield it more readily than the much smaller thing for which they have been contending—namely, the retention of the petty privilege, for which they had surrendered the greater and more inconvenient privilege of trial by jury, in 1872.

Since Lord Ripon insists on giving them the greater privilege in lieu of the less—apparently for no earthly reason except that it may save his amour propre—it clearly does not lie with the non-official Anglo-Indians to make provision for the administrative difficulties that will ensue. It is Lord Ripon's despotic will that has caused those difficulties; it is for him to find a way out of them.

THE ILBERT BILL AND TRIAL BY JURY.

[NOTE.—The following article was written before the announcement of the Government surrender; but we gladly publish it, as it exactly illustrates the value of the final arrangement now arrived at.]

WHY is it that our rulers at home take so different a view from ourselves of such a measure as the Ilbert Bill?

This question has occurred to many thoughtful Anglo-Indians, and has been answered in many ways.

A very simple and satisfactory answer lies obvious on the surface, and it is this.

Our English rulers confuse two very short and plain words—Judge and Court, and in this confusion lies the whole mystery.

A criminal court in England is the tribunal appointed to try all persons accused of crime, and is composed of two parts, the judge and the jury. Each of these parts has its own province, and the distinction may be taken shortly as this: it is the duty of the judge to know; of the jury to find out. Whatever is a matter of knowledge, the judge settles; whatever is a matter for original research the jury takes in hand. For the judge questions of law; for the jury questions of fact.

That the judge is not trusted to decide questions of fact is as glaring a fact as any in the whole range of public knowledge; and is in fact the principle of trial by peers in working order.

This principle of trial by peers has been introduced into India. The most dignified judges in Indian courts—the judges of the High Courts—are excluded from trying any question of fact in original criminal cases. The court is not complete unless a jury be formed to decide all questions of fact. The same is the case in the most advanced districts outside the presidency towns. Wherever a jury can be formed, to the jury belongs by law the exclusive right of deciding questions of fact.

The judge and jury, therefore, are united a court, and separately parts of a court only. The judge is not a court, but only part of a court.

Where a jury cannot be formed, and there only, seeing that the case must be tried and there is no jury, the functions of the jury are made over to the judge. That this arrangement is inferior to the other, is proved by the fact that a judge entrusted with the functions of the jury, if transferred to a jury district, is deprived of those functions at once.

The judge, who is also a jury, ought as far as possible to be qualified as a jury, besides being qualified as a judge. His functions as a jury are outside of, and in addition to his functions as a judge. He is a complete judge, even when divested of his functions of a jury, though not a complete court.

Now, a jury, before it is qualified to try a European, must, if he require it, be composed not less than half of Europeans. If a sufficient number of Europeans for a jury cannot be got together, the functions of the jury are laid upon the judge. He must be qualified as a jury to decide questions of fact. To try a European, the jury must be more than half European. But the judge being a single person, must be either wholly native or wholly European; he cannot be wholly native, or he is not a qualified jury. Therefore he must be, if required, wholly European. Therefore a court composed of a single person who is both judge and jury must, if the European accused require it, be a European.

The Ilbert Bill provides that a native judge sitting alone shall have power to decide questions of fact in criminal cases against Europeans accused. He is to exercise the full powers of a court, both judge and jury in such cases. There is then to be a jury wholly native. Wherever a few Europeans can be got together, and a jury can be formed, the judge will be debarred from touching questions of fact. Where three or four Europeans are within reach, protection; where there is only one, none. "From him that hath not shall be taken even that which he hath."

This does not touch Englishmen in England, for as a matter of fact, no judge is ever allowed to decide questions of fact; but in India, for want of a separate jury, the judge is often the jury besides. You shall find a judge at once debarred by the presence of a jury from trying natives, and compelled by the want of a jury to be himself the jury for the trial of a European.

Let those who are so enamoured of this Bill take heed that a judge is not a court; that a judge sitting alone and exercising the powers of a jury is something besides a judge; that he is exercising powers such as are given to no judge in England, and none of the highest judges in India; that the giving of such powers to him is justified by nothing short of sheer necessity; and is not required to complete his dignity. As a jury, he is not so good as a regular jury, and there is all the more need that he should be as far as possible properly qualified as a jury. If a European is to be tried, the one-man court should, if required, be a European, not because he is judge; but because he is jury.

POPE—Nov. 22, at Trichinopoly, Madras Presidency, India, William Henry Archdale, only child of Thomas Archdale Pope, Revenue Survey, aged one year and two months.

The Government of India do not consider it necessary to lay down any rules for the examination of medical officers of Volunteer Corps, as they hold honorary positions in their corps, and are not enrolled, and consequently they are ineligible for the capitation grant. The Government appear to have been misinformed on the point, as many honorary surgeons are enrolled members of Volunteer Corps in India, but possibly the decision may have reference to the special, not ordinary, capitation grant.

INDIAN MILITARY INTELLIGENCE.

(From the Times of India.)

Lieutenant C. R. Burn, 8th (King's Royal Irish) Hussars, has been appointed an extra Aide-de-Camp to the Viceroy.

Deputy Surgeon General R. Wolseley, A.M.D., has vacated his appointment of Secretary to the Surgeon General of the British forces, and proceeds home shortly.

An exchange of places on the roster of Indian service has been sanctioned between Paymasters Fenton and Brett, and the latter officer proceeds home during the present trooping season.

The city troops of H. H. the Nizam have hitherto been paid in suggur rupees; but a change for the better has just been introduced. The regiments under the command of Captain Finglass are now paid in halla siccas, and the officers and men are satisfied.

Mr. Gregson, the well-known temperance lecturer, is now on his annual tour, visiting all the divisional cantonments in India. He expects to finish the Bengal Presidency by Christmas, and then at the invitation of his Excellency Sir Frederick Roberts, will visit the Camp of Exercise at Bangalore, after which the Bombay and Punjab cantonments will be visited.

It is probable that Captain Lord Alweyn Compton, A.D.C., will resign his appointment on the Viceroy's staff in time to proceed home with his regiment, the 10th Hussars.

The Indian Government ship Czrewitch, 900 tons, Captain W. C. Hotham, arrived in harbour on the 1st instant, from Kurrachee, in tow with the I. G. steamship Dagmar, with the following details:—Two Europeans, rank and file; two clerks, Commissariat Department; eight native rank and file; thirty-five public followers, twenty-nine women and thirty-one children.

The troopship Clive is expected in Calcutta shortly. She is intended to convey the 14th Regiment Madras Native Infantry back to the Madras Presidency, in addition to other troop services between Calcutta, Rangoon, and Madras. The 14th M.N.I. from Dorunda and Hazaribagh is expected in Calcutta on the 29th ultimo. The women, children, and followers of the regiment are now at Hazaribagh, and will be trained to the Presidency from Giridhi. The 14th M.N.I. have now been several years absent from their own Presidency.

The Pioneer says:—The Kirkee Factory has managed to get so bad a name that complaints are readily forthcoming about any ammunition that it issues. But its reputation, it may be hoped, will be to some extent rehabilitated by the report of the Special Committee which, under the orders of the Government of India, was lately convened to test the Snider ball ammunition now made at the factory. After a series of searching proofs, lasting over a period of five weeks, the committee have come to the conclusion that the ammunition in question is thoroughly sound and serviceable, and the verdict has been endorsed by the Woolwich authorities to whom it was also submitted. The Bombay Army will, therefore, have the satisfaction of knowing that, whatever the defects of the past, the powder and shot now supplied to them are as good as can be made anywhere; and if the shooting should be bad, officers will at least be saved from the unsatisfactory idea that defective materials may be at the bottom of the matter.

A Nagpore correspondent writes on the 1st instant:—A meeting of the State Railway employes was held here at the Museum this morning at about 8 o'clock, for the purpose of starting a Volunteer corps. There were present—Mr. James Conder, officiating manager of the railway; Mr. F. L. Brown, examiner of railway accounts, Central Provinces; Mr. Luckstedt, superintendent, way and works, and others. After Mr. Conder had read the rules laid down by the Government, it was proposed and carried unanimously that he should be appointed captain of the new corps, and that Mr. Drakeford, the locomotive workshop foreman, should be appointed lieutenant. Mr. Conder, having thanked those present for the honour done him, suggested that papers should be circulated on the spot for the purpose of securing the signatures of those who wished to join. As many as 85 names were promptly given in.

The Duke and Duchess of Connaught left Meerut on the 2nd instant for Calcutta. The Royal party made a brief stay at Allahabad, and having been joined by H. E. Sir James Ferguson, who was travelling from Bombay to attend the opening of the Calcutta Exhibition, continued their journey to Calcutta, arriving there on Monday morning, Dec. 3.

Their Royal Highnesses, after witnessing the Exhibition, were to leave for Meerut.

FINAL FRENCH STRUGGLES IN INDIA AND THE INDIAN SEAS. Including an account of the Capture of the Isles of France and Bourbon. Colonel G. B. MALLESON, C.S.I.
London: By W. H. Allen and Co. 1878

"How India escaped from the government of Prefects and Sub-Prefects to fall under that of Commissioners and Deputy-Commissioners; why the Penal Code of Lord Macaulay reigns supreme instead of a Code Napoleon;
why we are not looking on helplessly from Mahé, Karikal, and Pondicherry, while the French are ruling all over Madras and spending millions of francs in attempting to cultivate the slopes of the Nilgiris, may be learnt from this modest volume. Colonel Malleison is always painstaking and generally accurate: his style is transparent, and he never loses sight of the purpose with which he com-

A RIDE TO KHIVABY

Royal Horse Guards.

Says page 13:—"Two pairs of boots lined with fur were also taken; and for physic—with which it is as well to be supplied when travelling in out-of-the-way places—some quinine and Cocker's Pills, the latter a most invaluable medicine, and one which I have used on the natives of Central Africa with the greatest possible success. In fact,
the marvellous effects produced upon the mind and body
of an Arab Sheikh, who was impervious to all native medicines, when I administered to him fiveCOCKLE'S PILLSwill never fade from my memory; and a friend of mine, who passed through the same district many months afterwards, informed me that my fan as a 'medicine man' had not died out, but that the marvellous cure was even

KANGRA VALLEY

INDIAN TEA GROWERS' ASSOCIATION,

LEICESTER-SQUARE.

The object of the Planters who have formed this Association is to establish a business for the direct supply of Tea from the Plantations of the Kangra Valley to the Public.

The distinctive feature of the business of this Association is, that the Tea is delivered to consumers in the original One-lb. tin foil lined parcels in which it is packed in the Valley, and it is guaranteed to be Absolutely Pure. There are three qualities, retailing respectively at 4s., 3s., and 2s. 6d.

The Association hopes that it may, without presumption, safely recommend this Tea to the Public, believing that it will continue to give the greatest satisfaction.

OPINIONS OF THE PRESS

"A quaint and undoubtedly clever book from the pen of a native of India. The volume consists of a series of short sketches of scenes and people in Gujarāt which may be regarded as typical of classes of the community, their ways of life and modes of thought. Mr. Malabari's English style is remarkably good, and seldom exhibits any want of ease. His book is of special interest as throwing some light on the real feeling of the natives with regard to their British rulers."—Daily Telegraph.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S CHLORODYNE

ABRONCHITIS.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE. Dr. J. C.
BROWNE (late Army Medical Staff)
DISCOVERED A REMEDY to denote which he coined the word CHLO-DYNE. Dr. Browne is the SOLE IN-VENTOR, and, as the composition of Chlorodyne cannot possibly be discovered by Analysis (organic substances defying elimination), and since the formula has never been published, it is evident that any statement to the effect that a compound is identical with Dr.
Browne's Chlorodyne must be false.
This Caution is necessary, as many persons deceive purchasers by false representations.

DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE. Vice Chancellor Sir W. PAGE WOOD stated publicly in Court that Dr. J. COLLIS BROWNE was UNDOUBTEDLY the INVENTOR of CHLORODYNE, that the whole story of the defendant Freeman was deliberately untrue, and he regretted to say it had been sworn to.
See The Times, July 12th, 1884.

DYSENTERY.

GENERAL BOARD OF HEALTH,
London, REPORT that it ACTS as a CHARM, one dose generally sufficient.
Dr. GIBSON, Army Medical Staff, Calcutta, states: "2 DOSES COMPLETE-LY CURED ME OF DIARRHŒA."
From SYMES & Co., Pharmaceutical Chemists, Simla. Jan. 5, 1880.
To J. T. DAVENPORT, London.

DEAR SIR.—We congratulate you upon the widespread reputation this justly-esteemed medicine has earned for itself all over the East. As a remedy of general utility, we much question whether a better is imported, and we shall be glad to hear of its finding a place in every Anglo-Indian home. The other hands we are happy to say, are now relegated to the native bazaars, and, judging from their sale, we fancy their sojourn there will be but evanescent. We could multiply instances ad infinitum of the extraordinary efficacy of DR. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE in Cholera, Dysentery, Dysentery, Spasms, Cramps, Neuralgia, the Vomiting of Pregnancy, and as a general sedative, that have occurred under our personal observation during many years. In Choleraic Diarrhœa, and even in the more terrible forms of Cholera itself, we have witnessed its surprisingly controlling power. J. T. DAVENPORT, M.D., Russell St., W.C.

We have never used any other form of this medicine than Collis Browne's, from a firm conviction that it is decidedly the best, and also from a sense of duty we owe to the profession and the public, as we are of opinion that the substitution of any other than Collis Browne's is a deliberate breach of faith on the part of the chemist to prescriber and patient alike. We are, Sir, faithfully yours, SYMES & CO., Members of the Pharm. Society of Great Britain, His Excellency the Viceroy's Chemists.

TOOTHACHE, RHEUMATISM.
DR. J. COLLIS BROWNE'S
CHLORODYNE is a liquid medicine which assuages PAIN of EVERY KIND, affords a calm, refreshing sleep WITHOUT HEAD-ACHE, and INVIGORATES the nervous system when exhausted.

CHLORODYNE rapidly cuts short all attacks of EPILEPSY, SPASMS, COLIC,
PALPITATION, HYSTERIA.
IMPORTANT CAUTION.—The IMMENSE SALE of this REMEDY has given rise to many UNSCRU-PULOUS IMITATIONS. Be careful to observe Trade Mark. Of all Chemists.
Is. 1d., 2s. 6d., and 4s. 6d.
SOLE MANUFACTURERS,

THE VOICE OF INDIA. A NEW MAGAZINE INTENDED TO GIVE EX- PRESSION TO THE PUBLIC OPINION OF INDIA.

THERE are in England large classes willing and anxious to do justice to India, but they find it very difficult to know how to act. They complain that Indian questions are intricate; that the opinions of official experts are contradictory; and that the people of India are dumb, and do not give expression to their needs. This defect it is now desired to remedy, by publishing monthly in Bombay a magazine somewhat similar in nature to Public Opinion in England, which will provide a compendium of all that is most valuable in the native journals throughout India on the leading topics of the day. It is hoped that the Voice of India will thus give forth a clear sound, interpreting between the rulers and the ruled, and making known the true wishes and feelings of the Indian people.

The Magazine will advocate no views of its own. It will seek only to reflect with care and accuracy the views set forth in the native press. The Indian people are naturally docile and conservative; and it is believed that the writings thus brought before the English public will be found to be characterised by a knowledge of facts, and generally be practical good sense and moderation. No doubt grievances will from time to time be set forth; but it is a policy of prudence no less than of justice to give these grievances a fair constitutional hearing. Accordingly, it is hoped that this publication will be welcomed by all Members of Parliament desirous of dealing with Indian questions, and that the facts thus brought together in a convenient form will be of value to journalists and other public writers. It is specially desired to bring the Magazine before the public in clubs, reading-rooms, libraries, and institutes throughout England, with a view to promote a sustained and intelli-
prising as it does 200 millions of our fellow-subjects.

THE PETITION TO THE VICEROY AGAINST THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL

THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

THE PETITION TO THE VICEROY AGAINST THE BENGAL
FROM THE ZEMINDARS AND OTHER LANDHOLDERS OF BENGAL.

GENERAL IN COUNCIL.

LANDHOLDERS OF THE PROVINCE OF BENGAL,

RESPECTFULLY SHEWETH,—That your petitioners desire to thank Your Excellency for having directed the publication, in the Gazette of the 20th of October last, of the official opinions received by the Government on the Bengal Tenancy Bill, now under the consideration of Your Excellency's Council. Those opinions were considered by your petitioners at a very large and influential meeting of the Committee of the Landholders' Association for Bengal and Behar, held at the Town Hall of Calcutta, on the 17th instant, and it was resolved to memorialise Your Excellency on the subject of those opinions. As those opinions deal with your petitioners' rights of property, it is obviously fair that Your Excellency should suspend your judgment upon them until you have heard how far they are admitted or denied. Upon a question so deeply touching their rights of property, Your Excellency would naturally not desire to come to a final decision, until an opportunity had been given to the persons, whose interests are affected, of being heard in their own defence.

2.—In their memorial to the Secretary of State, a copy of which has been forwarded for Your Excellency's perusal, your petitioners have discussed the statements contained in the despatch of the Government of India, dated March, 1882, and they have respectfully ventured to point out that the information which was supplied to Your Excellency's Government, was erroneous and misleading; and they would respectfully ask Your Excellency to reconsider the principles of the Bill in the light of the fact which that memorial discloses. In their present memorial your petitioners do not intend to go over the ground already taken in their memorial to the Secretary of State, but they will confine themselves almost exclusively to a consideration of the official opinions published in the Gazette of India of October 20, 1882.

3.—THE WEIGHT OF OFFICIAL OPINION AGAINST THE BILL.—There is one fact that must necessarily strike Your Excellency at the outset with reference to these opinions; the almost unanimous condemnation of the principles of the Bill by all the high officers under the Government of Bengal. All the Commissioners of Revenue, the officers who are entrusted with the direct administration of the Province, the officers who are supposed to know its needs and requirements, the officers who are the eyes and the ears of the Government itself, and through whom the Government derives all its knowledge and all its information, are without exception opposed to the principles of the Bill. They are unanimous in saying that there is no necessity for these violent changes in the existing law. They see no political necessity for the proposed legislation. On the contrary, they regard it as a wanton and uncalled-for invasion of the rights of property. The question is, are these high officers acquainted with the circumstances and requirements of the country, or are their opinions absolutely worthless? Are their opinions to be acted upon by the Government, or are they to be ignominiously rejected? They are charged with the active administration of the Province, and if in the discharge of their daily duties, in their daily intercourse with all classes of the people, they can see no necessity for the introduction of violent measures of legislation, how is it possible for the Government, which acts through these Commissioners, to allege that there exists any political necessity for change? The only high officer in Bengal who is in favour of the present legislation is the Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, who as one of the members of Your Excellency's Executive Council signed the despatch to the Secretary of State.

4. NO REASON ASSIGNED FOR IGNORING THEIR OPINIONS.—It is somewhat singular that in forwarding the Commissioners' opinions to Your Excellency's Government, the Lieutenant Governor has not stated the grounds upon which he dissents from their conclusions. He contents himself simply with observing that "if there really be any persons, who, in the face of the overwhelming accumulation of evidence afforded by the discussions of the past ten years, still question the necessity of legislation on the broad lines of the Bill, then it is quite hopeless that anything the Lieutenant Governor could say would convince them." But as Your Excellency will see from the papers, the accumulation of evidence is exactly on the other side. As far as your petitioners can see, there is absolutely no evidence and no facts before the Government which can justify legislation, on what, the Lieutenant Governor calls, the broad lines of the present Bill. If such evidence exists, it is but fair that your petitioners should know what it is. Your Excellency will surely not allow their rights of property to be destroyed, merely because the Lieutenant Governor states, in opposition to the all but unanimous opinion of his own officers, and without producing a particle of evidence in support of his statement, that there exists a necessity for "legislation on the broad lines of the present Bill."

5. POLITICAL EXPEDIENCY ALLEGED IN JUSTIFICATION OF THE BILL.—The Lieutenant Governor seems to assume that political necessity and political expediency are one and the same. In defending the Bill from the charge that it did not restore, but infringed the ancient land law of the country, the Lieutenant Governor writes a:—"It seems to the Lieutenant Governor that too much stress is laid throughout these discussions on arguments of an antiquarian character, and too little stress on what is politically expedient in the circumstances of the present time." But the Secretary of State did not sanction this measure on the ground of political expediency. He only sanctioned it on the distinct assurance of Your Excellency's Government that the exigency of the occasion demanded it, and that the changes proposed were not a departure from ancient custom and existing law. The foundation of the Bill rests upon these "arguments of an antiquarian character," and if they are now found to be erroneous, the Bill must, your petitioners venture to think, necessarily be abandoned, or the Secretary of State must be informed that he gave his sanction to the measure under a mistake.

6.—Your petitioners also venture to think that Your Excellency will not concur with the Lieutenant Governor in thinking that "political expediency" is a sufficient justification for the present measure. The fate of some fifty millions of people is surely not to depend upon the views which the Lieutenant Governor may happen to entertain on questions of political expediency. One Lieutenant Governor may belong to the peasant proprietary school, his successor may be in favour of upholding ancient institutions and preserving long-established rights; and are the laws of a country, so conservative in its feelings and traditions as India, to depend upon the accidental views of political expediency entertained by the Lieutenant Governor of the day?

7. FACTS RELIED UPON BY THE LIEUTENANT GOVERNOR IN JUSTIFICATION OF THE BILL.—Your petitioners will next ask your Excellency to consider the assertions which are put forward in the Lieutenant Governor's letter in justification of legislating on the broad lines of the present Bill. It is said that "in Bengal the demand for legislation came, in the first instance, from the landlords a while in Behar the cry was from the ryots for protection from illegal enhancement and ejection." Your Excellency will look in vain through the papers for any evidence of this cry. The landholders of Behar, in their petition to Parliament, which is noticed by the Lieutenant Governor, distinctly denied that the ryots of Behar had ever asked for the interference of Government, and certainly no petition from the ryots can be found among the voluminous papers published with the Bill, asking for the intervention of Government. Your petitioners may, therefore, fairly assume that no such petition exists.

8. ENHANCEMENTS.—Your petitioners would next ask, what evidence is there of "illegal enhancements." Your Excellency will search through the papers in vain to find a single instance of an "illegal" enhancement; or of an excessive enhancement, that is of an enhancement which was not fairly demandable from the ryots. Mr. T. M. Gibbon, one of the members of your Excellency's Legislative Council, a man of the largest practical experience, has exposed the fallacy of Mr. Finucane's figures, upon which alone this charge of excessive enhancement is made. But the Lieutenant Governor does not even notice Mr. Gibbon's letter, but contents himself with repeating the charge which Mr. Gibbon had conclusively disposed of.

9. EJECTIONS.—Your petitioners would next ask, what evidence is there of illegal ejections? In Your Excellency's despatch to the Secretary of State, b a statement of Mr. Reynolds is quoted to the effect, that the right of eviction is never exercised in the eastern districts, and that exemption from eviction would be a worthless boon in Behar, where ryots are hardly ever ejected; and after stating the fact he adds a reason of his own, for which he gives no authority, "because the new tenant could not possibly pay more than the old one. The assertion, therefore, of the Lieutenant Governor, that "ejection as a means of extorting enhanced rent widely prevails in both Bengal and Behar," is not only unsupported by any evidence whatever, but is directly contradicted by the inquiries made by Mr. Reynolds, one of the authors of the Bill.

10. ABUSES OF LEGAL PROCEDURE.—The next sentence in the Lieutenant Governor's Minute is as follows:—"Does the Behar zemindar or thikadar attach the whole crop of the ryot to compel payment of an increased jumma, or of illegally irrecoverable arrears? The Bengal zemindar applies corresponding pressure through suits for monthly kists, or through some other legal device, in order that he may (as one recently ventured to tell a Sub-divisional Officer) 'by hook or by crook' raise the rents and break the rates." The question asked in the Lieutenant Governor's letter, is best answered by the writer of that letter. At page 262 of Vol. 2 of the correspondence published with the Bill, Mr. McDonnell, secretary, thus writes on the subject of illegal distraint:—"I have had a good deal of experience of the use and abuse of the right of distraint. I know it has been perverted to ends foreign to its objects, but I know also if a magistrate-collector only exercises with attention, perseverance, and firmness, the legal powers with which he is vested, such misuse of the right can be checked." If therefore the testimony of the Secretary to Government is to be accepted, the existing law is amply sufficient to check any abuse in the exercise of the powers of distraint. With regard to the allegation that suits are improperly brought for monthly instalments, in order to raise the rents and break the rates, it is sufficient to say that no such practice, as far as your petitioners are aware, prevails. And your petitioners would respectfully say that they are surprised that such a general charge should have been made against them on a conversation of an unnamed individual with an unnamed sub-divisional officer; but whatever may be the authority for the statement, it will hardly be contended that a measure like the present is required to check abuses in legal procedure.

11. OCCUPANCY RIGHTS.—The letter then proceeds:—"When Behar landlords shift their ryots from field to field (as they have admitted they do) to prevent the growth of occupancy rights, the Bengal zemindar can apply no less patent pressure, if one may judge from the agreements, which are registered in such widely different districts as the 24 Parganas and Maimensing. In Bengal and Behar alike the efforts of landlords are directed towards the same end, enhancement of rent, prevention of the growth of tenant-right, and its destruction where it has grown up; and, if in Bengal they are not so successful in their efforts, that is not because of any dissimilarity of aim." With regard to the assertion that the zemindars illegally prevent the growth of occupancy rights, your petitioners have fully dealt with that statement in paras. 64 and 65 of their memorial to the Secretary of State. It might have been added that the agreements which are supposed to be so objectionable, are precisely similar to the agreements in force on the Government's own private estates. a It is, however, an entire fallacy to suppose that landlords generally have unduly prevented the growth of occupancy rights. That they have not done so, is clear from the fact that ninety per cent. of the ryots of Bengal are at the present moment in the enjoyment of occupancy rights. b

12.—Nor can your petitioners believe that your Excellency will attach any blame to those zemindars who may desire to raise their rents, if it is a fact, as admitted by the Government of India, that in many places the landlords have "failed to obtain their fair share in the increasing value of produce." These remarks effectually, your petitioners hope, dispose of all the charges brought against them in the Lieutenant Governor's letter; and it must be remembered that it is on the strength of these charges that the present violent measure is sought to be justified.

13. RYOTI AND KHAMAR LAND.—Your petitioners will next deal with the Lieutenant Governor's remarks on ryoti and khamar land. From the Government letter it appears that his honour is under some misapprehension as to the law, for he says:—"The fact is indisputable that under the Permanent Settlement (Regulation viii, 1793, sections 37-39), no land was recognised as khamar, which was not such on Aug. 12, 1765, the date of the grant of the Dewany, and there is no law recognising the creation of khamar land subsequent to that date. These facts afford a sufficient answer to the charge of an infringement of ancient rights, which is brought against the present proposals to define the limits of khamar land; and it may be added that from the facts established in other countries, of the clear line of distinction between dismesne and tenemental lands, analogies might be drawn in favour of those provisions of the Bill."

14.—Your Excellency will find, on referring to the regulation alluded to, that it has absolutely no bearing whatever upon the present subject. As explained in the memorial to the Secretary of State, one of the duties which Lord Cornwallis had to perform was to carry out the orders contained in the Act of Parliament, directing the restoration of the dispossessed zemindars to their estates. During their dispossession the zemindars had been allowed to retain, for their subsistence and support, their khamar or private lands, while the rest of their estates were let out to farmers of the revenue. With the restoration of the zemindars to their estates, the distinction between khamar or private land, and land assessed with revenue necessarily ceased. All land of whatever description included within the ambit of the estate, was assessed with revenue, the private lands equally with the lands held by the ryots. The words of the regulation are singularly clear, and it seems unaccountable that so mistaken a construction should have been placed upon them. The section c referred to by the Lieutenant Governor is as follows:—"The nankar, khamar, nuijote, and other private lands, appropriated by the zemindars, independent talukdars, and other actual proprietors of land in Bengal and Orissa, for the subsistence of themselves and families, shall be also annexed to the malguzary lands and the ten years' jumma fixed upon the whole under the following modification that such proprietors as may decline to engage for their lands be allowed the option of retaining possession of their private land above specified, upon the terms on which they have hitherto possessed them, provided they shall prove, to the satisfaction of the Board of Revenue, that they held under a similar tenure, previous to Aug. 12, 1765, the date of the grant of the Dewany to the Company, and have hitherto been permitted to keep possession of them, whenever their zemindaries or estates have been held khas or let in farm, but not otherwise. In the event of such proof, and of their availing themselves of the option above given to retain possession of their private lands, a deduction adequate to the neat produce of such lands, is to be made from the amount of the allowance fixed for excluded proprietors by section 44."

15.—It is perfectly clear that the Legislature were simply dealing with the case of the dispossessed proprietors, who were unwilling to take back their estates on condition of paying the prescribed revenue, and the amount of land which was fixed for their subsistence, was limited to the quantity held by them in 1765. The Regulation expressly says, that when the zemindars were restored to possession of their estates, these subsistence lands were to be annexed to the malguzary or revenue-paying lands; and so far as the Government were concerned, no distinction was made between private or ryoti land. If land was waste or had been abandoned by the ryots, the zemindar could either cultivate it himself or let it to others. No restriction whatever was imposed upon him. He could at his pleasure increase or diminish the private land in his own occupation.

16.—But the Lieutenant Governor says there is "no law recognising the creation of khamar land after that date." Why should there be? No one had claimed any rights in the khamar land which the proprietor occupied himself, or in his waste lands, which he could get no one to cultivate. The lands were exclusively his own; and under the law, he could deal with them as he pleased. Was it necessary to pass an Act to say so? But, as a matter of fact, a subsequent regulation was passed, and the full right of the proprietor to deal as he pleased with his waste lands was expressly declared. The words of the Regulation are as follow:—"Nothing in the present Regulation shall be considered to affect the right of the proprietors of estates, for which a permanent settlement has been concluded, to the full benefit of all waste lands included within the ascertained boundaries of such estates respectively, at the period of the decennial settlement, and which have since been, or may hereafter be, reduced to cultivation. The exclusive advantages resulting from the improvement of all such lands were guaranteed to the proprietors by the conditions of that settlement."

17.—But the Lieutenant Governor alleges another reason for impressing all waste lands with a ryoti stamp:—"In those districts where large waste areas still exist, and where there is no customary right of pasturage or easement involved, the faculty of converting waste into khamar might, perhaps, be conceded without any immediate loss to the community at large; though, looking to the overgrowing importance of emigration from the more crowded tracts to those wastes, there would be ultimate loss and difficulty. In those districts, however, where village wastes are the only pasture grounds, the case assumes a different aspect, for admittedly one of the most crying wants in these provinces is the provision of sufficient pasturage of cattle." And these proposals are made in the teeth of the Regulation thus quoted, that the proprietors were to enjoy the full benefit of their waste lands. In other words, your petitioners are to be restrained from cultivating their waste lands, because the Lieutenant Governor thinks that they should be kept for pasturage or the good of the community. But the lands are the zemindar's, no one even claims any interest in them, and if they are now to be impressed with ryoti rights for the benefit of prospective tenants, or are to be reserved for pasturage in the interests of the community at large, will Your Excellency be prepared to provide some means by which your petitioners may obtain compensation? It seems to be the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor that he is perfectly justified in taking away the rights of property of one class, if in his opinion another class of the community, to whom those rights are transferred will be benefited thereby. Your petitioners venture to think that legislation on such broad lines is not far removed from confiscation.

19. OFFICIAL LITERATURE.—Your petitioners will next invite Your Excellency's attention to paragraph 11 of the Lieutenant Governor's letter, which deals with the question of settled ryots and of occupancy rights. In this paragraph a principle is enunciated to which your petitioners must record their respectful dissent. The Behar Landholders in their petition to Parliament had made a statement on the express authority of one of the Permanent Settlement Regulations, and they are told that if they "had consulted the official literature on the subject," they would have been saved from their mistaken view of the law, and a despatch of the Court of Directors of 1819, and a letter of Lord Hastings of 1815, are then referred to as containing a correct interpretation of the Regulations of 1793. But are the laws to be constructed by official literature? Is official literature binding on the zemindars? They were no parties to the official correspondence, and had no opportunity of presenting their case to the Court of Directors. Their long-established rights, which the Permanent Settlement confirmed are not to be infringed, because in the early years of the century it became the fashion to condemn the Permanent Settlement of Lord Cornwallis. The views of the Court of Directors or of Lord Hastings can surely not be referred to in determining the "status of zemindars and ryots in 1793." That status can only be determined by the Regulations, by which alone your petitioners are bound and by which they claim that their rights shall be adjudicated. It is particularly necessary to distinguish opinions about the law from the law itself, because your Excellency stated in Council that your desire was not to create rights, but to restore them. It is not necessary that your petitioners should notice further the extracts quoted by the Lieutenant Governor, because the general questions there referred to have been so fully discussed in their memorial to the Secretary of State.

20. PROHIBITION OF CONTRACTS.—As to the necessity of barring freedom of contract, the Lieutenant Governor states that "the provisions on this subject contained in the Bill are in harmony with the principles of the Permanent Settlement (Regulation viii. 1793) which in sections 57 and 58 subjected to the collector's supervision and approval not only the forms of leases, but also the rates of rents recoverable under them." Here, again, the Lieutenant Governor is under an entire misapprehension of the law. There is not a word in the sections quoted which gives any power whatever to the collector to interfere with the terms of the leases or the rates of rent. On the contrary, all that the zemindar was required to do was to submit for approval the form of the lease usually granted to the tenants on his estate; he was not required to submit for approval the lease of each individual ryot. The Lieutenant Governor has evidently misread the section he refers to, and he must also have overlooked Regulation iv. 1794, section 5, which says:—"The approbation of the collector required to be obtained to pottahs by section 58 of Regulation viii., 1793, is to be considered to extend to the form only." It is evident, therefore, that the Lieutenant Governor misunderstood the law, but it is unnecessary to enter more fully into the question, as it has been fully discussed in the memorial to the Secretary of State.

21. TRANSFERABILITY OF OCCUPANCY RIGHT.—This question is fully discussed in paragraphs 48-51 of the memorial to the Secretary of State; and it is satisfactory to find that the Lieutenant Governor so far agrees with your petitioners as to admit, "that in Jhansi, in the Deccan, to some extent in the Santhal Parganas, and, possibly, in other parts of India, free sale has had evil results on a thriftless peasantry," but, in spite of experience, the Lieutenant Governor is in favour of free sale, because, he says, he will thereby "confirm and recognise a growing custom, which has so far produced no evil results." It appears, however, from the Lieutenant Governor's own figures, that the very evils the Lieutenant Governor admits followed from free sale in Jhansi and the Deccan are repeating themselves in Bengal. These figures show that out of 32,000 sales, more than one-third of the purchasers were money-lenders or non-cultivators. In other words, more than 30 per cent. of the land sold passed out of the hands of the cultivating classes.

22.—But if this is the effect of allowing these occupancy rights to be sold under the present law, what will be the effect of allowing free sale under the proposed law? The proprietary rights in the soil will then be vested in the "settled ryot." His interest will be far more valuable than the zemindar's interest, and capitalists who wish to invest in land will not buy zemindaries, but occupancy rights. Artificial laws cannot override and control natural laws. The capital of the country will naturally be invested in the purchase of these occupancy rights, and what chance will the ryots have of purchasing these rights against such competition? Free sale must inevitably reduce the ryot in Bengal to the same state of poverty and destitution as the ryots of Jhansi and the Deccan.

23.—There is one further remark which you petitioners would wish to offer on the Lieutenant Governor's figures. The figures are relied upon to show that occupancy rights are generally sold. That, however, is not the point. The point is, are they sold without the landlord's consent? Occupancy rights are frequently transferable under an implied or express agreement with the landlord, and they are always transferable with his consent. The figures in the Lieutenant Governor's letter do not show that a single transfer took place against the will of the landlord. The established law of the land, both at the present time and before the Permanent Settlement, is the same, that an occupancy ryot cannot transfer his land without his landlord's consent. This is the law, and why is it to be altered? Even the Lieutenant Governor admits in his letter that the zemindars have, at any rate, a right "of assuring themselves that the persons they admit to permanent residence and cultivation within their estates are persons of good characters, and likely to make solvent tenants." But if the principle of free sale is admitted, and no veto is allowed to the landlord, what guarantee will there be that the purchasers of these occupancy rights are either "persons of good character, or solvent industrious tenants?" The right of pre-emption, as pointed out at par. 53 of their memorial to the Secretary of State, is no safeguard at all. It is altogether an illusory provision. But valueless as it is, the Lieutenant Governor would make it more worthless still. The landlord is not even to be permitted to keep the land when bought in his own occupation. Any ryot can come and demand the land from him. The landlord may have bought up the land to add it to his own garden, or to erect a manufactory upon it, but the interests of the community, according to the Lieutenant Governor demand that he should be prohibited from doing what he pleases with his own. Any ryot who takes a fancy to the land must have it, though there may be acres upon acres of uncultivated land in the village which the proprietor would only be too glad to let. Your petitioners would respectfully ask, whether such extreme and extraordinary views as to the rights of property do not in some degree lessen the weight which would otherwise attach to the opinion of so high an officer as the Lieutenant Governor of a Province? Is it possible that anyone who holds such advanced views as to peasant proprietorship and the rights of the community, could impartially consider the rights of the landlords?

24. PROHIBITION OF CONTRACTS, AND OFFICIAL SUPER-

VISION OF ZEMINDARS.—Your petitioners have discussed in the memorial to the Secretary of State (paragraphs 28-39) the provisions of the Bill which prohibit a zemindar from entering into any contract with his ryot for payment of an enhanced rent. The Lieutenant Governor supports a this provision, on the ground that under the old customary law it was the function of the ruling power to determine what rent the ryot was to pay, and because "all agreements, both as to form and substance, were subjected by the regulation to official control." Your petitioners have shown in the memorial to the Secretary of State that there is absolutely no ground for the assertion that the ruling power ever fixed the rates of rent in Bengal, and they have already pointed out in this memorial (par. 20), that the Lieutenant Governor is equally mistaken as to the official control sanctioned by the Regulations. They have only one further remark to make as to official control. During the last three years the number of leases annually registered in Bengal has varied from 241,000 to 214,000. In future these leases will not only have to be registered, but will have to be submitted for the approval of a revenue officer. When the lease is submitted to a revenue officer, what is he to do? Is he to go to the spot and examine the quality of the land and the nature of its produce, and then decide whether the increased rent agreed to be paid is fair and equitable? If he is to do this, have the Government any agency by which it is to be done? There will be some 250,000 leases to be examined every year. It is obvious that neither the collectors nor any other officer of any position will have leisure for such work. To whom, then, is this business to be entrusted? By whom are the zemindars to be supervised? If the approval is to be anything more than formal, some inquiry will have to be made in each case, and if so, landlords and ryots may have to dance attendance before the revenue officer for months. Twenty leases may be presented to him on the same day from twenty different villages. Is he to visit each village? If so, is he to go at the Government expense, at the landlord's expense, or at the ryot's expense? It will certainly not be fair for the zemindar to have to pay for the pleasure of being placed under tutelage; nor can the ryot be expected to pay, because he has never asked for this protection. It is not a pleasing prospect for the ryot to be dragged away from his fields to attend at a revenue office and to wait there until the revenue officer has leisure to examine the agreement. Then how is the officer to test the fairness of the agreement? Is he to make a local investigation, to hold a judicial inquiry, and take evidence? If he does, who is to pay for all this? If, on the other hand, he holds no inquiry, what is the use of submitting the agreement to him at all? All that he can do is to satisfy himself that it was voluntarily executed. But the registration officer already does this, and why therefore have it done twice over? To your petitioners' apprehension the proposal seems too preposterous to be seriously considered. It is merely a visionary impracticable idea which, if attempted to be carried out, will throw the whole agricultural community into confusion, and subject them to a new species of extortion. The proposal is only intelligible on the supposition that it is intended to stop all intercourse and all friendly feeling between a landlord and his tenants.

25. TABLE OF RATES.—Your petitioners have already dealt with this subject in their memorial to the Secretary of State (par. 47), and no further observations upon it are necessary.

26. MAXIMUM RENTS.—Your petitioners have pointed out in their memorial to the Secretary of State (pars. 40-46) the utter impracticability and unfairness of this proposal; and they have then shown how entirely mistaken the Lieutenant Governor is with respect to the "rebba" or money rental taken by the Mogul Government; and your petitioners will here content themselves with correcting a misapprehension under which the Lieutenant Governor apparently labours with regard to a proposal of the British India Association that the maximum rent should be fixed at one fourth of the gross produce. It need hardly be observed that any proposal made by the British India Association is in no way binding upon the landholders of Bengal and Behar. They must altogether demur to the statement that "the zemindars have approved of the principle of regulating the rack-rent by assigning a maximum portion of the produce to the landlord." On the contrary, they object altogether to the introduction of new speculative principles for the calculation of rents, the effect of which it is quite impossible to foresee. The zemindars have clearly stated these objections in their memorial to the Secretary of State; and it further appears from the debate upon the Bill in the Legislative Council, that most of the zemindars, who are members of the British India Association, did not agree with the proposal contained in their Secretary's letter. Moreover, the suggestion of the British India Association differed essentially from the proposal of the Government. The Association suggested that the maximum rent should be calculated on the gross produce of the land; which, as pointed out by Mr. Gibbon, is very different to calculating the rent with reference to stable crops alone. It is very singular that the Lieutenant Governor does not attempt to meet Mr. Gibson's statements, which are referred to in paragraph 44 of the memorial to the Secretary of State.

27. COMPENSATION FOR IMPROVEMENTS AND DISTURBANCE.

—The only other points which call for observation in the Lieutenant Governor's letter are the paragraphs which deal with compensation for improvement and disturbance. To compensate a ryot for legitimate improvements, which have been made with the consent of the landlords, is of course reasonable and proper, but this is not what the Bill proposes to do. The avowed object of these provisions is to give to the non-occupancy ryot, occupancy rights. A non-occupancy ryot is a tenant-at-will. Such was the law, as found by Mr. Shore, before the Permanent Settlement. It has continued to be the law under the Permanent Settlement Regulations. Are the Government prepared to change the law? If so, let it be done openly, and in a straightforward manner. Let the Legislature say that all ryots, whether they have occupied the land for twelve years or not, have occupancy rights in it; and that, for the future, there is to be no such thing as a tenant-at-will. It is a confusion of ideas and a contradiction of terms to say that a landlord can eject a ryot at his pleasure, but that the ryot can obtain compensation for disturbance.

28. SETTLEMENT OF RENTS AND RECORD OF RIGHTS.—Your petitioners fully admit that if a record of the area of each ryot's holdings and the rent paid for it could be made, it would be a great benefit to the country. Theoretically the idea is an excellent one. But anyone who has any practical experience in zemindari management, knows that the preparation of such a record would lead to the utmost confusion and an enormous amount of litigation. In many places the ryot holds a much larger area of land than they professedly pay rent for. Hence their objections to the measurement. If a record of rights is prepared the lands will all have to be remeasured; and the litigation which always attends a remeasurement will inevitably follow. The question is, whether it is worth while to prepare a record of rights at the expense of disturbing the peace and tranquillity of the country.

29. ABOLITION OF DISTRAINT.—With regard to distraint, no allegation has been made that the present law has been abused in Bengal; and therefore there can be no necessity for introducing a change; and no reason whatever is alleged for restricting the powers of distraint to the land held by non-occupancy ryots. There is absolutely no ground whatever put forward for altering the immemorial law and usage of the country with regard to distraint. Upon this subject your petitioners cannot do better than quote the opinion of Mr. Secretary M'Donnell, whose name is attached to the Lieutenant Governor's letter. Writing as collector of Sarun, he thus states his opinion:—"Instead of abolishing distraint forthwith, I would retain it in the case of occupancy holdings. I want to avoid bringing occupancy rights to auction sale as much as possible. . . . The security of the Government revenue depends on the speedy realisation of the landlord's rent, the prosperity of the province depends on the prevalence of harmony between zemindars and ryots. The right of distraint is an immemorial custom which effectually secures the first point, while distraining a ryot's crop sets the ryot less against the zemindar than a suit in Court to sell him up would do. Passing, however, from occupancy to non-occupancy holdings, I cannot but express amazement at the credulity of the Commissioners that, without a right to distraint, zemindars could ever collect their rents. I speak on this point with the intimate knowledge derived from the personal supervision of Ward's Estates, and the personal management of Government Khas Mehals. Without the exercise of the right of distraint of the crops of ryots who are here to-day and away to-morrow, or without the knowledge on the ryot's part that such a right exists, and may be immediately exercised, a zemindar has but small chance of getting his rents." These views have your petitioners' entire concurrence.

30.—Your Excellency will understand that your petitioners have been considering the official opinions, more particularly with reference to Bengal. The Behar zemindars will separately deal with the circumstances of their own province.

31.—And your petitioners, in conclusion, humbly pray that Your Excellency will consider the statements made in this memorial as well as in their memorial to the Secretary of State, and reconsider the principles of the Bill in the light of these statements. If these statements are founded on facts or on truth, it is impossible that Your Excellency can allow the Bill to proceed. It is but reasonable and fair that Your Excellency should hear both sides of the question before your Government resolves on a measure which deprives them of their property and rights. The responsibility of the measure rests upon your Excellency; and all that your petitioners ask is, that their representations shall be considered before further action is taken in the matter of the Bill by the Select Committee. From Your Excellency's remarks in the Legislative Council on the 2nd March, your petitioners certainly understood that the principles of the Bill would be reconsidered by the Executive Council

32.—Your Excellency has now before you not only the representation of the zemindars, but the opinions of all the high officers of Bengal, and the verdict of official opinion has been almost unanimous against the Bill. Under these circumstances, will your Excellency allow the Bill to proceed? The very prospect of such a revolutionary measure being passed has already greatly depreciated landed property throughout the country. No such important question as the present has been submitted for the decision of the Government since the time of Lord Cornwallis, one of the ablest and most distinguished of Your Lordship's illustrious predecessors. He had able advisers to assist him, but he sifted the evidence for himself and formed his own independent judgment. Your petitioners would ask Your Excellency to do the same. If Your Excellency will do this, in the light of the facts now laid before you, your petitioners have no fear of the result. Your petitioners believe that Your Excellency desires to do them justice, and this is all that your petitioners ask. And your petitioners as in duty bound will ever pray.

BENGAL AND BEHAR LANDHOLDERS' MEETING AGAINST THE BENGAL TENANCY BILL.

A meeting of the Central Committee of the Landholders of Bengal and Behar, for the purpose of memorialising the Secretary of State and the Viceroy on the subject of the New Bengal Tenancy Bill, was held on Nov. 17 at the Town Hall, and was attended by about three hundred native zemindars and others who are interested in the Bill. Rai Rajendra Lala Mitra Bahadur, LL.D., C.I.E. (President of the British Indian Association and of the Central Committee of the Landholders of Bengal and Behar), was in the chair, and the following are the names of a few of the leading gentlemen present:—

Maharajah Sir Jotindra Mohun Tagore Bahadur, K.C.S.I.; Maharajah Narendra Kishna Bahadur; Rajah Satyanund Ghosal Bahadur; Rajah Satyasuttia Ghosal Bahadur; Rajah Poorna Chunder Singh Bahadur; Prince Ruhimuddin (Mysore Family); Rajah Harendra Kishna Bahadur; Babu Joykissen Mukerji; Rajah Hurbullub Narayan Sing; Rajah Surjunkt Aoharji Chowdry; Hon. H. J. Reynolds; Mr. J. J. Keswick; Mr. H. Bell, Barrister-at-law; Mr. Allan, Barrister-at-law; Mr. Miller, Official Assignee; Mr. G. Grant, Bhagulpur; Mr. MacGregor, Barrister-at-law; Mr. J. G. Apar, Barrister-at-law; Mr. Murdoch (Moran and Co.); Mr. Donn, Barrister-at-law; Mr. Hill, Barrister-at-law; Mr. J. H. Belchambers; Hon. Durga Churn Law; Nawab Mir Mahomed Ali; Babu Peary Mohun Mukerji; Kumar Debendra Mullick; Babus Damodar Dass Burman; Gobind Chander Dutt; Shyama Charan Law; Bijoy Kissen Mukerji; Ohoy Churn Goho; Hem Chander Mukerji; Onooroop Chandra Mukerji (Jonai); Hurry Mohan Bose (Howrah); Ashutosh Dhur; Sarendra Mohun Tagore; Bhyrob Chandra Banerji; Hem Chunder Gossain (Sirrampore); Jagadanund Mukerji; Charu Chundur Mullick; Mushi Sirapil Islam; Babu Sita Nath Ray; Hon. Mohini Mohan Roy; Babus Tara Prasanna Mukerji (Bardwan); Kissory Mohun Roy; Kunjulal Banerji; Grish Chunder Chowdry; Nundlal Mukerji (Janai); Hurry Hur Mukerji (Utterpara); Borendra Kumar Tagore; Trinath Chowdry; Saligram Sing; Parbutty Sunker Roy (Nota); Ramanath Palit; Kesar Chander Achaji Chowdry (Mymensingh); Jotendro Chander Ghose; Ohoy Churn Nundi, (Shahapur); Upendro Narain Nundi, (Shahapur); Mohant of Bardwan; Bijoy Kumar Dutt; Bidhu Bhusan Roy; Kumar Promode; Kumar Tagore; Roma Nath Ghese; Nobo Kumar Mukerjee (Janai); Komner Suidhu Mukerjee (Birbhoom); Lala Bun Bihary, Mr. Miller, Private secretary to H. H. the Maharajah of Burdwan; Babus Probode Chunder Mullick; Rai Mohun Lal Mitter; Nund Lal Bose; Kissory Lal Gossain; Sri Gopal Mullick; Buddun Chunder Chowdry; Gun Prosad Sen, secretary Behar Landholders' Association; Omarendra Nath Chatterjee.

The CHAIRMAN opened the meeting as follows:—Before proceeding to the programme of to-day I desire to offer a few words with reference to the nature of this meeting. This is not a meeting of the zemindars of Bengal, Behar, and Orissa, nor is it a public demonstration with the object of eliciting the opinions of members. As stated in the circular and advertised in the newspapers, you will perceive that the name given is the "Central Committee." Now this Central Committee consists of barely fifty-nine persons, and in meeting here our object has not been to have these fifty-nine persons and make a demonstration, but to suit the convenience of many of your members. We represent, however, a constituency of 150,000 families in the Lieutenant Governorship of Bengal; many of these families were at one time sovereigns in their own right; many more were territorial chiefs of great power and influence, and own large estates in more than one district. We meet here as representatives of these families. There are others—a very influential and large class—who represent the capital of this country, either in the hands of natives or Europeans who have cast their lot in the country. The subject before us is of vital importance, and in considering what steps we should now adopt we want free, quiet, and serious deliberation, and not harangues and ostentatious sentimentalism, and for this purpose we require a small meeting. It happens, however, that we are members of a much larger constituency than, strictly speaking, would come under the name of a Central Committee. These gentlemen are all more or less interested in zemindaries. They feel the warmest sympathy for our endeavours to protect the rights of those who had a landed interest in this country for centuries, long, long before the British rule was established here, and they have thought fit to aid us and to give their encouragement under the circumstances. In the name of the Executive Committee, and of the Central Committee, I desire to tender our thanks to those gentlemen for the sympathy they have shown to us. (Applause.) The first subject in connection with the meeting should be the abstract of proceedings of our Executive Committee. Your Committee have been engaged in the preparation of the representations regarding the bill, and the publication of papers, and the issue and dissemination of information both here and in England. We have native agency now in England, and we hope ere long that the misrepresentations which have been studiously circulated in England to detract public opinion from the true nature of the Bill will now meet from the hands of our agents and friends there an adequate reply. We have published several papers, but need not name them. One of them I wish to name because it is one which we have not published. We owe it to our friend, Mr. Bell, who has most generously written an able defence of the rights of the zemindars in their proprietary rights in their lands. Mr. Monro has also written one during the recent discussion, and our thanks, therefore, are due to him also for this paper. Other papers have also been written to me. These I have not yet read, but I have heard that an admirable paper has been issued by—but I will not refer to that. There is another item to which I wish to refer, and that is the interest which some of the newspapers have taken in our proceedings, and the generosity with which they have opened their columns to those writings and correspondence for the discussion of the questions connected with the Tenancy Bill. To them our thanks are particularly due. (Hear, hear.) We have an uphill work to do. We, most of us, belong to a conquered nation; we are weak, we are without influence, we are without power, and we have to contend against the most powerful bureaucracy on the face of the earth, determined to carry things without regard to limit, or reason, or justice or right; and in such a case, however little may be the assistance we shall derive, we cannot but feel deeply grateful for every item of help to give strength to a cause which, however just, is I am sorry to say, not backed up by power and influence. (Applause.) The first item on the programme is the correspondence which has been published in the Indian Gazette of Oct. 30. This gives us the opinions of a number of selected officials of the Government on the nature of the Tenancy Bill. You are aware that, when that Bill was drafted by the Bengal Government and forwarded to the Indian Government, we applied for copies, but got none. The Indian Government recast the Bill and sent it on to the Secretary of State for his sanction without giving an opportunity to the 150,000 zemindars, whose interests were at stake, to say a single word. (Cries of "Shame.") This is an omission to which reference will be presently made by abler individuals who will address you. But it was with the view of, to a certain extent, minifying that omission, that the Government thought proper to send out the Bill to those selected officials for opinion. I always dislike any such matters being referred to "selected" officials. Pray select not; for in selecting the human mind is thereby warped, and you will select those who are likely to be of the same opinion as yourself. However, the opinions elicited are strongly and markedly opposed to the principle of the Tenancy Bill. Out of some sixty persons who have sent in their opinions, the great majority are strongly opposed to it. The Bill is a very large and complicated one, and in giving their opinions on such a subject, it is but natural to suppose that sixty men cannot agree on all points. There must be dissentients and differences, and it is not at all unnatural that you have some opinions which are strongly in favour of the policy of the Government. But the great majority are against it. Out of a total of ten commissioners, the great majority are against it, and I will just read a few—read one or two of these opinions on it. I now quote the opinion of Mr. Lewis, who says:—"Speaking generally, I may say that the introduction of this measure is viewed by all whom I have consulted on the subject with the gravest apprehension, as tending to embitter the relations between landlord and tenant, and likely to lead to a crop of litigation, with all its accompanying frauds and chicanery, which must in the end injure and not benefit the ryot. These views have been expressed, not only by landlords, but by native officials unconnected with land, and they are based mainly on the conviction that the provisions of the Bill do not deal with facts as they really exist, but seek to evolve and insist on theoretical privileges as appertaining to the ryot which that class have never enjoyed; and which they are for the future to enjoy at the expense of the landlord." Mr. Beames is another. He has been long connected with the Burdwan division, and is a philologist, a master of languages, an historian. I cannot say how far his sympathies are with the people, but he is of opinion the Bill will not subserve the only purpose for which it has been drafted, and his reasons are thus given:—"The ryot suffers from causes over which no Government can have any control; the country is over-peopled; and the intensity of the struggle for existence is due principally to this cause, and not to the incapacity or bad management of the zemindars. Everyone will marry, and will have heaps of children. No one will emigrate, a vast majority will grow nothing but paddy, and the poorest will spend in advance the earnings of ten years on a marriage feast or a religious ceremony. It is very doubtful whether any legislative measures will improve the condition of people whose manners, customs, and prejudices are so utterly incompatible with improvements as these." You have, most of you, read the opinions of Mr. Munro and Lord Ulrick Browne; who also brings to the subject his vast experience. As for the collectors, there is a very strong consensus of opinion against the Bill, and the one to which I would call attention is only three lines in length, but it is very expressive. It is the collector of Jessore who says:—"I consider the Bill to be a most arbitrary, partial and unjust measure. It will sever all friendly ties between landlords and tenants, and lead to a state of things that must have disastrous results. There is nothing in it that will facilitate the collection of rents, and very little that will do any real good to the ryot. In fact, the Bill seems to have only one object, and that is, to stamp out landlords." This is the opinion of one who is not one with you in colour, in caste, in language or in religion. If he has any sympathy it is for the Government, of which he is a distinguished servant; and there you have his opinion. Attached to this is the report from the Government of Bengal. One would suppose that in forwarding the opinions of all these different officers of such diverse characters, the Bengal Government report would give us a connected review of the whole, pointing out the errors of such officers as have committed mistakes, and pointing out where the opinions are founded on experience and where they were correct. Nothing of the kind occurs in it. There is a great deal in the way of analysis, but no real analysis of diverse opinions. Every paragraph ends with "Mr. Rivers Thompson thinks," or "Mr. Rivers Thompson is of opinion." Of course, if the opinions had come direct from an Archbishop, or from His Holiness the Pope, it would have been something, but when forwarding opinions of this kind, we had a right to expect a little more discussion, a little more criticism, a little more extensive review. The more important points connected with the Bill are all more or less touched on, but in not a single one have I seen anything which controverts the position which your committee have adopted since this discussion has arisen. What has struck me as most remarkable is the new meaning which has been attached to the old words. I am aware that I am not a master of the English language, and I speak with great diffidence when I have to speak of the meaning of English words, but still I must say that it was not until I read this report that I learnt the meaning of the word "distrain." I had always understood it to mean a process which would ensue before the Court's decree. In ordinary cases in England, the landlord has the right to issue distrains. A landlord not getting in his rent on the evening of Saturday, takes measures to stop the tenant from entry into his own land. That is distrain. But distrain means a different thing now in the hands of our Legislature and Government. We are told the zemindar will have the power to distrain the land. They will first bring an action; they will prove their claim; they will obtain a decree, and then get out a distrain. I think the process given for distraining was something very different from distrain. But we live and learn, and we have learnt from the Government that distrain means the same thing as a warrant. The cardinal principle on which the report of the Government is based is "policy;" not justice, not right, not contract, not old binding laws and regulations, but "policy." That overrides the pure and humble demands of justice and fair play. It is the day now for the initiation of a new policy. That policy says, "Do wrong that good may come out of it, rob the zemindar that the tenant may thrive." Acting upon this policy it is proposed that the rights of the zemindars in their soil shall be transferred to the ryot, and the ryot shall have full liberty to sell the land that he gets from the zemindar. I look upon this right of pre-emption of sale as one of the shibboleths of the Radicalism of the day. I say this right of free sale is a right which will convert the zemindars, reduce them to the level of labourers, convert them into candidates for emigration to Demerara. (Applause.) Even the mover of the Bill was aware of this when he spoke with reference to the right to sub-letting, that it will place the ryots in the position in which they will have no legal protection. The Lieutenant Governor himself is aware of this, yet it has been proposed to create a large mass of men who are to be an encumbrance on the community, and a source of embarrassment to the Government, and that, gentlemen, is the great good which has been afforded to the ryot at the sacrifice of the zemindars. Mr. Thompson will not listen to history, he will not listen to experience, he will not listen to old laws. Though the Bill is a standing protest against everything which is existing, with everything which belongs to the present day, still, like the drowning man, the Bill is to clasp custom as the only protection for justifying this severe measure. You perhaps think I am exaggerating; you perhaps think that I have not fully either understood or appreciated the Lieutenant Governor's arguments. Here are his very words:—"It may be accepted that freedom of transfer was not an incident of the khudkhasht ryot's holding; and the Lieutenant Governor is not unmindful of the fact that in Jhansi, in the Deccan to some extent, in the Southal Pergunahs, and possibly in other parts of India, free sale has had evil results on a thriftless peasantry. If he had to deal with the question as one of mere theory, Mr. Rivers Thompson would probably not remain uninfluenced by its historical aspect, and by the dangers of vesting a population with transferable rights of property before habits of thrift among them had been fully confirmed. But the Lieutenant Governor has here to deal with a question, not of theory, but of actual practice. It is here not a matter of "introducing a source of temporary prosperity," and encouraging an "increase of thriftlessness on the one hand, and of greed on the other," as was the case in the Deccan, but of confirming and recognising a growing custom, to which the needs of the country have spontaneously given birth, and which has so far produced no evil results. There it is—custom, and the only time that custom has been appealed to, to protect the principle of the bill. But there is something else. There are certain figures which have been produced from the Registrar General of Assurances office of last year, which show the number of sales which have taken place. I find that there were in all permanent tenures which were sold some 17,835 during the course of the year, and of tenures 32,000 at the same time. The Lieutenant Governor appeals to this fact as a conclusive one. I have looked at them, and my impression has been that nothing more condemnatory than these figures has been put forth. Out of these 17,000 and 32,000, or 50,000 sales, in one year, one half nearly passed away from the hands of the ryots to those of money lenders and zemindars, that is, you are depositing, even now, the ryots, at the rate of 24,000 every year, of their occupancy rights. And who were the purchasers? Why, they were the money lenders and zemindars; that is, the very men from whose clutches the Government is most anxious to save the ryots. Will not the zemindars and the indigo planters know their own interests? Will not they buy all the occupancy tenures which come into the market in order to get out of the limitation of rents as fixed on this law? They will be entirely oblivious of their own interests if they do not, because it will be a legal right which they will be justified in dealing with and in trying to make the best of. The appeal made is that the thing will right itself; that political economy will soon set right the evils which may be first produced by this law. I have not a doubt about the effects of political economy. I certainly believe that the causes of political economy will do their work in time, and have their effect without let and hindrance, but I have some experience in the matter of political economy. It was in 1864 or 1865 that I called on Sir Cecil Beadon, on three or four occasions, to try and induce him to do something for the starving people of Orissa; and every time Sir Cecil told me, "don't you be uneasy, the laws of political economy are certain; and if there is a demand there will be a supply." Of course, I went away without saying a word in reply. What was the result? Political economy did do its work, did send a supply, but political economy does not run as well as poverty and suffering and famine, and there were killed one million out of three millions in Orissa before political economy brought relief. (Hear, hear.) In the present instance I have no doubt that political economy is wholly in the right, but before it reads its lessons to persuade people from marriage, and the expenses attendant on marriages, before the people learn these things, and before they learn it is better to starve and die, they will go to money-lenders, whose speculative tendencies will have bought off every inch of land in Bengal which is worth buying, and when the land is in the hands of that community, no kind of political expedient, except the bayonet, perhaps, and the gun, will save it from those hands. This is the good which has been promised to the ryots. But there is one relief offered. The Government say that "we will relieve the ryot, and we will not do any injustice to the zemindar, and give them the right of pre-emption," and so prevent any outsider from entering. On the face of it this is really very kind, but if you will look into it you will find it is the veriest Dead Sea apple which ever any Government condescended to offer. The zemindar may buy, but he is not to get anything of what he buys. The value of the occupancy land depends on the difference between the production on the one hand, and the cost of production and the rent on the other. The Government says:—"Let the zemindar pay the full price and buy it, and get nothing." I can illustrate this better by saying that I have an old horse for sale, and ask my respected friend, Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore, to buy it, and give him permission to buy it. I tell him, "Here it is, pay the full market price, and take it, but you are not to clap a saddle on its back. If you do so, there will be a law court for you." "You can," says the Lieutenant Governor, "gain something by fines, but nothing by way of enhancements, and if you do not dispose of it this year, why, we will snatch it away from you." That is the right which the Government has given in the name of pre-emption. I have one more word to say, and that is with reference to those who will benefit by the Bill. It is not the zemindars; for they, according to the Collector of Jessore, are to be abolished. It is not the ryot, for even the Lieutenant Governor says in one place that there is an over population, and emigration is good. It will not be the public at large, for it is no concern of theirs. Who then, will benefit? The public say that it is the Government for whose benefit the law will be changed. I believe that impression is false, but there it is, and the chain of evidence produced by the public is certainly very imposing. There was a time when the revenue had to be collected at the point of the bayonet, and a great deal worse in the time of Warren Hastings. A great many oppressive acts unnamable were committed in his name, and the name which he got from the great orator Burke, was "Factor General of Bribes." (The speaker here read out a quotation from one of Burke's speeches, and continued) This is the language of Burke, and that was the way in which the revenue was then extorted. Lord Cornwallis came and put a stop to all this; and brought peace, and prosperity, and good will all over the whole of Bengal, and Europeans even were loud in his praise. The people themselves attested their respect for the memory of the great nobleman in the statue which stands in the Hall. But gratitude is an innocent virtue, and does not last long, and after 1816 the rulers of the country thought that something should be done to make the land yield more. The permanent settlement of Lord Cornwallis was found to be a drawback, and a serious drawback. The first step taken was the resumption measures of 1825, in order to ensure the validity of all lands which were said to have invalid tenures. That measure had to be abandoned, as the Government paid for them at normal prices. An Act was then passed for the sale of zemindaries on that occasion, but a greater crisis came when with the Mutiny, when we had to change the laws of revenue. Then the income-tax was extended to permanently settled lands. It had to be given up because of the oppression it caused. Then the Government passed three Acts for taxing zemindaries. They are called cesses. They are as good as revenue, and they have added taxation upon zemindaries to the extent of three quarters of a million, that is, an addition of 25 per cent. But the Government are not yet satisfied. They have something yet, and they have entrenched on occupancy tenures in the name of the ryot, from which land can be permanently snatched from the zemindar, and they are being daily accessible to further taxation. That is the impression abroad, not my firm conviction or opinion. "Hypothesis" the term which is now applied to this new principle now enunciated, and which has brought on this Bill. With a few further remarks the Chairman called on Sir Jotendro Mohun Tagore to move the first resolution.

SIR JOTENDRO MOHUN TAGORE said:—Gentlemen,—Our best thanks are due to the Government of India for publishing the papers on the new Tenancy Bill. These papers are exceedingly valuable—they show that the balance of opinion among the local officers, those who represent the Government in the eyes of the people, who come in daily contact with them, and are therefore in the best position to gauge their wants and requirements, is decidedly against the Bill in its present form not to say that some of the most experienced among them question altogether the good policy of disturbing the peace of the country by such revolutionary legislation. I am grieved exceedingly to observe that our Lieutenant Governor for whom, personally I have the highest respect, has totally disregarded the opinions of his responsible officers, set aside the stern facts of history and every day experience, and come to conclusions some of which go even beyond the Bill. Of the two sets of opinions which found expression during the time when inquiry was being made previous to the Permanent Settlement, with regard to the real status of the zemindars, the Lieutenant Governor has evidently adopted the one which is the most popular at the present day, though opposed to the vital principles of the settlement. One fact, they say, is worth a hundred theories, and the single fact that the then responsible rulers of the country who founded and consolidated the British Empire in the East, and introduced the admirable administration system, the wisdom of which has been tested by the working of a century, had, after the fullest inquiry, for which they had the best opportunity, come to the conclusion that the zemindars were the "actual proprietors of the soil," and had concluded the perpetual settlement with them, I say this single fact should have set the question at rest for all time. But, unfortunately for our country, the wave of Communism has invaded our shores from the far West, and engulfed some of our highest officials, our lawful guardians. The theory that the land of the country belongs to the people is dominant with them, and the musty records of the Permanent Settlement are laid under contribution, in order to support their foregone conclusion; every passage that favours their opinions is prominently brought forward, and everything that goes against their views is either ignored, or attempted to be explained away. The minute of the Lieutenant Governor distinctly says that the whole of the Permanent Settlement literature undoubtedly proves "the true position of the zemindars as removable revenue collectors."

Of course, the minutes of Sir John Shore and of Lord Cornwallis, and the Regulations which affirm that the zemindars were "the actual proprietors," and that "the property in the soil was vested" in them are completely ignored. "Custom" and "customary law" are often cited in the minute when some benefit is to be conferred on the ryots, but when the same custom is appealed to on behalf of the zemindars, the Lieutenant Governor disposes of it by saying that "any custom, even if legal, which would deprive them (the ryots) of agrarian rights would be indefensible on grounds of public policy." In the same way, chapter and verse from the Permanent Settlement regulations are freely quoted whenever they suit the views of the present Government with reference to raising the status of the ryots, but passages in the same regulations which unmistakably uphold the rights of the zemindars are rejected as mere "theoretical rules" of some early "period," which, "become unmeaning at the present day" and all appeals to these regulations on behalf of the landlords are characterised as "arguments of an antiquarian character" on which too much stress should not be laid. In such cases it is even said in the minute that "the changes of a century . . . forbid that we should go back now to the consideration of a state of things which existed nearly a century ago." And yet it is said that the object of the new Tenancy Bill is to restore the ancient land law of Bengal. And now with regard to the statement that the main object of the present Bill is to "restore the ancient land law of the country." If this proposal were literally carried out, it would be more to the disadvantage of the ryots than otherwise, as will be seen from Mr. Justice Field's very valuable work on landholding, and the able pamphlet of my learned friend Mr. Bell, which very clearly sets forth what the ancient land law of the country was. An able and impartial writer in the Indian Review justly observes:—"The minutes of Lord Cornwallis and Mr. Shore make up the principal part of what is known as the literature of the Permanent Settlement, and there is more in that literature favourable to the claims of the zemindars than to those of the ryots." The Lieutenant Governor evidently perceives this to the fullest extent, and attempts to modify the assertion by observing that "we are not now seeking to rehabilitate the Khudkasi ryot in exactly the same status which obtained in 1793;" and further on, "all that we can hope to do is, to place the settled ryot of to-day in a position analogous to that occupied by his prototype." In other words, the ryot is to receive all the benefits of the Permanent Settlement regulations, and a great deal more under the Socialistic doctrines of the day, which aim at the destruction of all rights of property of the zemindars, on the plea of what the Lieutenant Governor calls "public policy," and what is "politically expedient in the present circumstances of the country." Now what the peculiar present circumstances of the country are, which would justify such an exceptional measure as the proposed Tenancy Bill, is what we are unable to comprehend; for fortunately for Bengal we have had no agrarian disturbances like those which happened in Ireland, except the one which is known and often cited as the Pubna riots, but which, if the truth were to be told, owed its origin more to the meddlesomeness and over-zeal of certain officials than to the discontent of the ryots themselves; for no sooner was there a change of regime and the then Lieutenant Governor expressed a determination to stamp out the fire and passed the Agrarian Disturbances Act, than peace and order were at once restored. I have already stated that not only does the Lieutenant Governor support the Bill, but in some respects goes much beyond it. In theory His Honour agrees with those who object to sub-letting, but then because it has been the practice for a long time (though in the case of the zemindars the practice of a hundred years counts for nothing) he would not only recognise it, but would give to every ryot who sublets his holdings the "status and immunities" of tenure holder, and allow subtenants of all degrees the benefit of occupancy rights. In the Bill, the burden of proving twelve years' occupation rests with the ryots as it is in the existing law, but the Lieutenant Governor proposes to throw the onus of proving a negative on the zemindars, for he plainly tells us:—"No one can doubt that in the vast majority of cases the presumption will not be rebuttable, and zemindars will not question it, and thus an inquiry into exceptional cases alone will be needed to secure to the country at large the peace and contentment which must attend on the well-defined status of the bulk of the agricultural population." The Bill would permit zemindars to retain in their own hands any ryoti land which may come into their possession either by purchase or relinquishment, and allow them to cultivate it by their servants or by hired labour, if they choose, but the Lieutenant Governor would compel the zemindars to relet it at the old rate, and would attach a penalty in case they fail to do so within a year, because the Lieutenant Governor thinks that "the constitutional principle is that ryoti land cannot, under any circumstances, be converted into khamar." Two different limits of rentals have been prescribed in the Bill for occupancy and non-occupancy holdings respectively, but the Lieutenant Governor would equalise both by lowering the limit of non-occupancy rents from 31½ per cent. to 20 per cent., which is the prescribed rate for occupancy holdings. With regard to facility for the recovery of rent, the Lieutenant Governor thinks the abbreviated procedure for the recovery of rent continued in this Chapter (14) is an improvement on all previous proposals on the subject. He admits, however, that the zemindari party "assert that while their rights have been invaded in one direction, nothing has been done to facilitate the recovery of their just rents," but he charges the zemindars with having done nothing more in the way of suggesting a better procedure than bringing to the notice of Government the scheme which I had the honour of submitting in 1876. It may be in the recollection of his Honour that the British Indian Association had suggested two other procedures, namely the certificate and the bill of exchange procedures, but none of these has met with his approbation. It will, therefore, be seen that if the zemindars have not been able to make any proposal which commends itself to the Lieutenant Governor's approbation, it is more their misfortune than their fault. And here I would take the liberty to observe that if it is really believed that the proposed abbreviated procedure will give the zemindars full facility for the realisation of their rents, what necessity can there be of retaining, as His Honour proposes, a special certificate procedure for the Government estates and Mr. Wards' estates? The very fact that, notwithstanding the peculiar advantages which the Government enjoys, the Government wants special facilities for collecting its own rents, shows that the realisation of arrears from the ryots generally is not after all, an easy task. The provision for eviction, though seldom resorted to by the zemindars, operated as a great check upon recalcitrant ryots, and as that provision will now be withdrawn altogether, and the process of distraint practically nullified, there are likely to be greater difficulties in the way of realising rents under the new law; for with due deference to the opinion of the Lieutenant Governor that "as much as can reasonably be done to facilitate the recovery of arrears from ryots has been done by the Bill," I must say, and I think most zemindars will agree with me, that no appreciable facility will be given by the proposed procedure in the Bill. His Honour considers that the proposal to vest selected Munsifs with final jurisdiction in rent suits of a value not exceeding fifty rupees, is "a very great concession to the zemindars," but bearing in mind the feeling against the zemindars entertained by the generality of Munsifs (of course there are honourable exceptions among the class), I am not quite sure if the removal of the wholesome check of appeal is to be received by the zemindars as an unmixed blessing. If this is the great concession we are to have from the Government by way of compensation for the loss of all dearly-cherished rights, I think the zemindars would much rather not have it at all. I will not detain you much longer, gentlemen, for I think I have quoted sufficiently from the minute to show that His Honour the Lieutenant Governor has not approached this important subject in that impartial spirit which we had a right to expect from the responsible guardian of the country. Unfortunately Radicalism has taken such a strong hold on the minds of our Governors that it has become almost hopeless to have a fair discussion of the land question, for all arguments which go against their preconceived notions have scarcely any chance of a hearing. The Sanscrit poet says:—"When the King from whom we have a right to claim protection himself takes up the sword, who will save us then?" And this, gentlemen, happens to be the condition of the zemindars of Bengal and Behar at the present time. The writer in the new Indian Review, who justly calls himself "Nirapakya," or the impartial, remarks that "any legislation that will lower the status and influence of the zemindars is most earnestly to be deprecated. That there may be one or two black sheep among them cannot be denied. But as a body they are a source of strength to the Government, and there are numbers of them of whom Bengal may be proud." Indeed, the zemindars of Bengal and Behar, through good report and bad, have always been staunch in their loyalty to the British Government. While, in other provinces, jaghirs have been granted to many persons in recognition of this sentiment, how is the loyalty of the zemindars of Bengal and Behar to be rewarded? They are to be visited with a law which will deprive them of rights that they have either inherited from a long line of forefathers or paid for in hard cash, in firm reliance upon the good faith of Government, which will deteriorate the value of their property and cripple their very means of subsistence, and reduce them to the same dead-level system that has necessitated relief acts in the Deccan and other parts of the country. One word more and I have done. Let it not be supposed that I am opposed to the true interests of the ryots, I hold that the interests of the landlord and tenant are closely bound up with each other, that if a contented peasantry is a country's pride, it is also the landlord's strength and mainstay. I am sure that my fellow zemindars are willing to make legitimate concessions to the ryots, and we have already made several suggestions to that effect; but the more we give in, the more is demanded from us. It is against this policy of extreme radicalism that I humbly but strongly protest. I have, therefore, much pleasure in moving the first resolution:—"That the Committee submit a memorial to His Excellency the Viceroy in Council with reference to the official opinions upon the Bengal Tenancy Bill, published in the supplement to the Gazette of India of Oct. 20, 1883."

Mr. KESWICK said:—I have much pleasure in seconding the Resolution which has just been moved. I cannot think that the Government, in face of the further weighty reasons which have been put before it against the Bill, will persist in proceeding with it in its present form. Its one-sidedness having been so clearly shown, not by the landholders only, but by almost all the experienced Government officials consulted, it should be revised, and founded not on sentimental theory, but on justice and equity. A peasant-proprietary may be desirable, and I agree with His Honour the Lieutenant Governor that the securer a ryot feels in his holding the greater incentive he has to improve it. A man farming his own land will take a greater interest in and spend more money in improving it than he would dream of doing if he only held a terminable lease of it, but if those of us who have inherited land, or who have purchased it, are now to be deprived of our proprietary rights in favour of the ryots, surely we should receive compensation. The Government puts its hands into our pockets, takes out part of its contents, and gives it to our tenants, then tells us that, by an ancient law, wrongly allowed to fall into desuetude for about a hundred years, the tenants have an inherent right to that portion. Is it just to do this, against the law as it has been administered, and against the custom which has prevailed for the last one hundred years? Is it not most unjust to do it when, as shown by the excellent pamphlet published by Mr. Bell, the ancient law was the reverse of what the framers of the Bill state it to have been? Notwithstanding the assertions of Sir Ashley Eden and others well qualified to speak on the subject, that the ryots of Bengal are in a prosperous condition and thoroughly know their legal right, and the zemindars, in many cases, are more in need of Government help than the ryots, we find that the latter are to be treated like children, and disqualified from entering into contracts with their zemindars. Then provisions suited for one part of the country, but entirely unsuited for other parts, are to be forced alike upon all. It is well not to overlook the fact that the zemindar has got himself a bad name on account of illegal cesses collected from the ryots, and it is said, you may as well hang a dog as give him a bad name, and this the Government seems to be bearing in mind! It should be remembered, however, that many of these cesses have been paid voluntarily by the ryots as an equivalent to the zemindar for not exercising his undoubted right of reassessing the land. Still I agree with the opinion of Mr. Munro, that a stringent law to prevent illegal cesses would do much more good than the revolutionary one proposed, which will rob the landlord to give the ryot what he never asked for and has no right to. It is unfortunate, gentlemen, that some of the officials who were connected with the preparing of this Rent Bill are Irishmen known to hold anti-landlord views. I have the greatest respect for the honour and ability of the gentlemen to whom I refer, but the fact of their holding such views makes us feel that it would have been more satisfactory to all parties had their counsels not been sought in this matter. Lord Ulrick Browne, Commissioner of Rajshaye, and Kuch Behar, and a countryman of the gentlemen to whom I have referred, says in his opinion regarding the Bill:—"I think that such important changes, affecting detrimentally the rights and interests of a large and important class in a vast country, should only be made on very strong grounds, such as, for instance, the grounds advanced by Mr. Gladstone when introducing a somewhat similar measure for Ireland in 1870, and again, more recently, when he supports his proposals by urging that as good general laws and administration and assistance in the reclamation of waste lands, had failed to dispel serious ill-feeling among the mass of the population of Ireland towards England and the Government of the United Kingdom, it was necessary to take an extreme step in a direction specially acceptable to that population, in the hope that it would put an end to what was always a serious political danger. The result of such a measure as this in that case might well make thinking men pause before introducing it into another country, even if the circumstances under which the Irish measure was applied existed here. In Ireland the people were finally convinced that the action of the Government originated in fear and weakness, and those who had previously paid the rent and lived quietly were persuaded that if they resorted to greater and greater outrages, the English Government would give them more and more. As a consequence, concession made at the expense of the landlord was followed by further outrages, till Government saw that rigorous repression and the suspension of constitutional liberties must take the place of concession. Thus, the result of a similar measure in Ireland was almost disastrous, but it was tried to meet circumstances which seemed to the Government to require special treatment: What are the circumstances under which it was proposed to introduce the present measure? They are about as different from those found in Ireland as it is possible to conceive. No special and strong grounds, political or other, exist in the present case, nor have any been asserted in support of this Bill. Even the Rent Law Commission, the majority of whom proposed
